Professor Jones, holder of a Gugenheim scholarship, has been teaching in Michigan since leaving the University. He has written poetry and is the author of America and French Culture and co-author of The Romanesque Lyric. He has also contributed to Scribner's.

While a member of the faculty here Professor Jones founded the Bull's Head bookshop.

DRAMA GROUP TO PRESENT COMEDY DURING WEEK-END

Playmakers Will Produce Former Student's Work, "Sad Words to Gay Music."

Continuing their policy of occasionally producing an original play by some University student or graduate, the Playmakers will present Sad Words to Gay Music, by Alvin Kerr, in the Playmaker theatre Thursday, Friday, and Saturday of this week.

Kerr's play is built around the character of an American girl who goes to London to visit the mother of her fiance, a young Englishman whom she has met in New York. The young heroine's irrepressible spirits prove very distressing in the English household, and the worst suspicions of her intended mother-in-law are confirmed when she runs away and marries an old friend of the family.

Intriguing Home-Life

The home-life of this very unusual couple furnishes excellent comedy during the last two acts. The middle-aged husband decides to regain his youth by continually throwing parties, dancing on every possible occasion to the loudest and snappiest music, inventing a bar that pops out at the touch of a button, wearing violently colored pajamas, and, to cap the climax, coming down with a severe case of the mumps.

SALON ENSEMBLE TO FURNISH MUSIC FOR PLAYMAKERS

Thor Johnson's Ensemble Will Play Overture and Entre-Act Music Thursday and Saturday.

The Carolina Salon ensemble, conducted by Thor Martin Johnson, will play at the Playmakers theatre Thursday and Saturday evenings in connection with the current bill of the dramatic group featuring Sad Words to Gay Music, a Broadway farce written by a former member of the Playmakers.

The ensemble will present an overture and will play between the acts. This is the sixth campus appearance of the group this quarter. The most recent presentation was in connection with the Playmaker production of George Bernard Shaw's play You Never Can Tell which opened the Shaw-Henderson festival here. The ensemble has scheduled several other appearances before the end of the quarter among which will be a chapel program given before the freshmen assembly.

STUDENTS DESIRE RONALD TAMBLYN AS LOCAL PASTOR

Petition Circulated on Campus Requests Call for Substitute Presbyterian Minister.

A movement sponsored primarily by Presbyterian students in the University has been launched on the campus with the aim of having the local Presbyterian call Reverend Ronald Tamblyn to the pulpit of the church, it was learned yesterday.

Reverend Tamblyn has filled the pulpit of the church during the illness and since the death of the late Dr. W. P. Moss, and has gained popularity with both students and church members.

The movement has taken the form of a petition to the congregation of the church and sponsors are actively canvassing the campus to secure the names of eight hundred or more students who are well enough acquainted with the work of Tamblyn to back the movement.

Capability Cited

The petition states that during his short residence in Chapel Hill, Tamblyn has shown himself to be "a capable, tactful, devoted and thorough leader and scholar in both religious and intellectual life"; and that the presence of a man of his capacity in the community will be infinitely more beneficial than the presence of several less experienced men.

Reverend Tamblyn, a graduate of Harvard Seminary, came to Chapel Hill from Greensboro. He is considered one of the most liberal ministers in the south.

Greek Weiner Purveyor Is Cosmopolite And Wanderer

George Colment, Who Operates Chapel Hill's Odoriferous Hot Dog Stand, Is Accomplished Linguist and Has Figured In Rare Adventures.

From olive groves to sizzling face in a manner to remind one of a soldier who has been around the world and seen and suffered much, George would never be suspected of any amatory conquests. But Mrs. Colment—and there appeared to be a twinkle in her eye at the time—stated that George has an especial fondness for young Turkish and French misses. George smiled deprecatingly, as though to say that this was of the far-distant past. But an active imagination could easily picture George as a lineal descendant of either Ali Babba, Abou Ben Adhem, King Solomon, or the man in the iron mask.

George figured quite prominently last year in the Ashby Penn shooting. In fact he was the casus belli of that shooting affray, and was nothing loath to recount his own part in the affair. "But that will never happen again," said George. "Look." And behind the counter the polished muzzle of a wicked looking shotgun was visible. George means business. "And look," and he flourished a pearl-handled revolver, which he claimed he intended to carry around with him wherever he went. "And it's loaded," hissed George closely. Apparently all George needs to do in the future is to hiss closely to any intruder.

During the war, George ran three restaurants at Newport News, Va., and while he catered there to some "tough character" (Continued on page two)

BOTANY DIVISION SECURES VOLUMES ON WILD FLOWERS

Set of Paintings by Mary Vaux Walcott Is Composed of Most Complete Selection of Flowers.

The botany department has just received a five volume set of wild flower paintings by Mary Vaux Walcott entitled North American Wild Flowers. This collection was bought by the library through the Bibliographical Aids fund and represents the most complete selection of North American flowers in existence.

Mrs. Walcott has spent her life in painting and describing these various types of flowers. Many of them were done on geological trips with her husband, Dr. Charles Walcott, former secretary of the Smithsonian institute. The western flowers were frequently painted under very trying conditions. Often, on a mountain side or high pass a fire was necessary to warm her stiffened fingers and body. During a period of ten years she spent from three to four months a season in studying in the Canadian Rockies.

A secret process, which brings out the white very distinctly, has been used in printing this collection.

New Walk Planned

Members of Faculty and Student Body Not Decided on Location.

Ten prominent members of the University faculty and student body met yesterday afternoon in front of Graham Memorial, deliberated for over a half of an hour, and failed to reach a decision on a new walk to be laid between Graham Memorial and the gate facing the post office.

Members of the grounds committee, making the survey, stated yesterday that no action on the new walk would be taken until student preference had been ascertained through a selected group of representative students.

JENNINGS SPEAKS AT CHAPEL HERE

Episcopal College Work Secretary Discusses Putting Zest Into Our Lives.

Coleman Jennings, college work secretary for the Episcopal church in Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and West Virginia, yesterday addressed the freshmen and sophomores during assembly period with a short but interesting talk in which he analyzed the two trends which tend to put zest in life.

The problem which confronts us all, according to Jennings, is: "How are we to get zest out of life?" He said that there are two trails to that end; one being a downward trail, and the other an upward trail. "Following the crowd, snobbishness, and filling our lives so full that we have no time for the really worthwhile things in life," were cited by Jennings as examples.

Jennings stated that religion was the best of the upward trends. Many people put religion in the "believe it or not" class, according to Jennings, but belief in the fact that there is a being above us certainly cannot be put in that class.

Devotionals Today

Voluntary devotional services will be resumed this morning at 10:30 o'clock in Memorial hall with J. D. Winslow conducting the short scripture reading and prayer. Walter Patterson will open and close the program with meditative selections on the organ.
