(Continued from page three) inning with three straight singles, Critz scoring, and Terry stopping at third. The Giant manager scored a moment later when Jackson hit a ground ball down to first base. Washington's first run came in the fourth inning and like the second one was unearned. Meyer singled, went to second on Goslin's ground out, advanced to third on Critz's error of Manush's hit, and counted when manager Cronin forced Manush at second.

Terry made the greatest catch of the game when he took Goslin's blow in the eighth frame. Moore, New York left fielder, made a fine running catch of Cronin's pop in the seventh inning. Moore was looking at the sun. Jackson, Giant veteran, played a steady game at third, getting four assists. Schulte was the fielding star for Washington, making four nice catches and several fine throws.

Mancuso had Sewell, Senator catcher well spotted. The Giant catcher, knowing Sewell's weakness for hitting to third base, on one occasion warmed Jackson up by throwing him a grounder just before Sewell was due to hit. Sewell went out three times, Jackson to Terry.

Terry got a place-hit in the third, driving a pitch through
