

WEBB WILL HEAD DAILY TAR HEEL BUSINESS STAFF

SCHOLARSHIPS DISCUSSED

Joe Webb of Hillsboro was selected yesterday by the Publications Union board to serve as business manager of the DAILY TAR HEEL to succeed Marcus Feinstein of Philadelphia. His new duties were taken over with today's issue.

Webb is a junior and has been actively engaged on the business staff of the newspaper for three years. He served as assistant business manager during the fall quarter under Feinstein.

Makes Statement

The board yesterday made a formal statement regarding the new publications scholarships about which some controversy has recently arisen. The University scholarship committee thought that the board perhaps was not justified in the creation of the funds with money from student fees for use for the benefit of a certain class of students.

The P. U. board, however, yesterday declared that the creation of the scholarships was in line with the policy of the group this year to invest any accrued surplus into the publications for their improvement and that they believed that the scholarships would work to this end.

It was also decided that the scholarships would be given to four members of the staffs with no stipulation regarding the division of the staffs on which they worked. It was originally planned to award two scholarships to members of the business staffs and two to members of the editorial boards.

One of the outstanding actions of the group was a vote taken favoring going on record as commending the present federal administration and its predecessor not only for the sighting of new social objectives but also for their recognition of social research and of the role of social science leadership in formulating policies pointing toward a planned social order.

EXHIBITION SHOWS MANUSCRIPTS AND BOOKS ON PIRATES

Buccaneer Included as Part of Display on Pirates.

The library is featuring an exhibition this week on pirates and buccaneers. Three cases in the library contain books and manuscripts on this subject, many of these having been printed several hundred years ago.

One case contains only manuscripts and books on the life of Edward Teach, who is commonly called Blackbeard, and other pirates of that time, especially those who preyed on the North Carolina coast. This case also contains a contemporary map of this period, and a manuscript of 1717 recording the trial of a pirate before the House of Commons and the House of Lords.

A peculiar feature of this case is a copy of the pirates issue of the Buccaneer. According to R. B. Downs, librarian of the University, the Buccaneer got its name from the notoriety of the pirates on this coast.

Another case is on the subject of the pirate in literature. This case includes a collection of the drawings of Howard Pyle on pirates and pirate ships. There are also in the case works by such famous authors as Scott and Marryat. A third case is on the subject of the history of pirateering.

BONES OF WHALE FOUND BY LOCAL GEOLOGY STUDENT

Remains of Prehistoric Monster Discovered by Copeland.

Bob Copeland, Jr., a student in geology at the University, while making geological study during the Christmas holidays, came upon huge pre-historic bones exposed by the erosion of a branch of the Chowan river in Northampton county.

The find was reported to the geology department and the area was visited by a party consisting of W. F. Prouty, head of the geology department, G. R. MacCarthy, C. E. Fike, Chilton Prouty, and Copeland. The bones, the age of which can be counted in millions of years, proved to be those of one of the earliest known modern "right," baleen, or "whalebone" whales.

The whale was from 40 to 45 feet long. The skeleton was largely disassembled and rested in a bed of green sand and marl with many Miocene marine shells of great variety. Only those bones which are near the surface of the ground or entirely exposed are hard enough to allow removal. The party was successful in removing parts of the fossil intact.

As soon as the bones found have been prepared for exhibition they will be shown along with the fossil shells from the same bed in a special case in the geology museum.

PRESS RELEASES NEW BIRD STUDY

"Birds of the South" by Charlotte Hilton Green Is Profusely Illustrated.

The University press announced yesterday the release of "Birds of the South" by Charlotte Hilton Green. The book is composed of a group of studies of birds commonly found in the southern part of the United States as well as those which regularly migrate to the south for the winter months.

Mrs. Green takes each bird individually, tells its habits, the environment to which it can best adapt itself, and gives other facts which are especially interesting to lovers of nature. The book contains 32 plates in full color which picture the birds in their natural habitat. In these pictorial descriptions Mrs. Green has endeavored not to exaggerate the true coloring of the particular species she is portraying. The work also contains 30 black and white pen and ink drawings by Paul Porterfield.

Mrs. Green has been interested in nature study for many years. She has studied animals in their native haunts and at man-made feeding stations. She has recently had a series of articles published in the Raleigh News and Observer as special Sunday features. Her husband is a professor at N. C. State College in Raleigh. Mrs. Green intends to follow this book with another, "The Return of the Birds."

Freshman programs this quarter will be planned by the assembly committee and the freshman executive committee. Instead of continuing programs of a general orientation type, the committee will plan this quarter to give the class the kind of program which is most enjoyable and instructive.
