

Couch Offers Plan To Aid Southern Problems

making allotments on the amount of cotton produced on a farm in the last five, or in the last ten years, the family farm has no chance whatsoever.
"If allotments were made as I have suggested, the remaining tenants could be placed in self-sustaining farm villages. Large numbers of these tenants, who have lost their farms and who are at present reduced to beggary, would welcome an opportunity such as the farm colony would provide."

Favors Specific Plan

Couch is firm in his belief that if the south's political representatives would take the farm situation seriously the agricultural life of the region could be reorganized. He is in favor of definite and ready action, instead of considering each little attempt as a matter of pure experimentation.

"There is a need," he declares, "for committees to study the problem, to make decisions, and then to go ahead, without taking a lot of time making experiments when we already know enough about soils and crops to do most of what needs to be done"

Couch has just completed a tour of western North Carolina and parts of Tennessee, during which he discussed his plan with many different types of people. He says all the educators he conversed with thought the plan sound, that all the farmers he met declared themselves eager to engage in such an enterprise.

COUNTY EXPECTS JUVENILE COURT

Durham County Plans to Institute New Method for Conducting Courts for Juvenile Delinquents to Increase Efficiency.

It has just been learned that Durham county is actively considering the establishment of a juvenile court of a more improved type than is possible under the clerkship of the county superior court.

The production of this idea comes not only from citizens and officials of the county itself but also from the Durham Crime Study club, in whose discussions some of the University sociology and psychology faculty and students have participated during recent months.

It is significant that this interest can be shared by representatives of Duke University, who form an important part of the civic group, and representatives of the University. It shows the growing spirit of co-operation between the two institutions.

Dr. Harry W. Crane of the University psychology department has given much time to the programs of the club. The influence of the University in the group is also shown by the fact that Dr. Lee M. Brooks of the sociology department was elected vice-president at the meeting held last week.

Dr. John S. Bradway of the Duke legal aid clinic is president. He was invited to speak last week to Dr. Brooks' class which meets each Wednesday but the meeting was postponed because of the Lhevinne concert.
