

LEADER OF DUKE LEGAL AID CLINIC GIVES TALK HERE

Dr. John S. Bradway Speaks on "The Public Defender" Before Group of University Students and Faculty Members.

DISCUSSION FOLLOWS TALK

Dr. John S. Bradway, of the Duke legal aid clinic, spoke here last night before a group of students and faculty members on "The Public Defender."

Bradway concerned himself mainly with showing the need for legal aid clinics, illustrating with actual cases, the way in which the clinic at Duke functions. "A man on the way to justice," he said, "is confronted with three obstacles: the problem of court costs; the problem of delay; and by the fact that court procedure is so complicated that trained persons are needed to insure the proper meeting out of justice."

Helps Poor

Bradway averred that the legal aid clinic is the means by which the poor man is lifted over these obstacles. "The problem of the poor man in the criminal courts," he stated, "is a distressing one. With an adequate group to investigate this critical point, definite progress can be made."

The leader of the Duke legal aid clinic traced the history of the legal aid system in American jurisdiction, and pointed out the states in which the system is functioning with most satisfactory results.

WORK ADVANCES ON ART GALLERY

Partitions Formerly Dividing Building into Rooms Torn Down; Construction Will Not Be Completed for Two Months.

Work on Person hall, the second oldest building on the campus, which is being made into a University art gallery, is progressing, with the partitions which formerly divided the edifice into small rooms being torn down and the main section being prepared for a concrete floor.

The gallery was scheduled to be completed by May 1, but due to changes in the number of CWA laborers working on the hall, it will not be completely finished until at least two months, according to an announcement by P. L. Burch, University superintendent of buildings, who is in charge of the work.

Old Floor Removed

The old floor has been completely taken up in the middle section of the building and the earth is being flattened to receive a concrete floor.

The eastern part of the edifice will be divided into one large room and three small ones together with a small hall. On the western end there will be three rooms and another hall.

The middle and largest room in the hall will contain the main part of the art gallery. The end rooms will be used for teaching purposes and for special exhibits.

Work has been slowed up on the structure recently due to the shorter hours and small proportion of men which are allowed to carry on work.

Economics Students And Professors Observe New Deal After First Year

Faculty Members Tolerantly Skeptical of Roosevelt Policies, Exploring Lack of Governmental Power to Enforce Regulations; Students Optimistic, But Confused as to Significance.

The New Deal, observed critically and impartially by students and professors of economics, has left a fairly favorable impression. It is true that many faults have been pointed out, and many of its chief ideas have been attacked, but the general attitude toward this new administration is one of tolerant skepticism.

To the minds of Carolina students of economics the NRA has been successful so far. It has succeeded in recomposing the self-respect and firing the enthusiasm of the masses. Towards its goal, which the students understand to be a system of harmony and a definite step nearer some type of socialism, the administration is slowly progressing. Its backbone is cooperation, and motivated by the ideal of public harmony for public benefit, the nation has been able to brighten some of the darker aspects of our recent near-chaos.

Faculty Sees Flaws

But this enthusiasm is waning. Every professor interviewed revealed in his discussion the feeling that something is amiss in the administration of this great ideal. Some place the blame upon the fact that the people expected too much in so little a time. The people seem to desire "a democratic socialism—an impossibility" as R. S. Winslow, economics instructor terms the fact. The New Deal was a public hysteria, and no people can be expected to remain at such a fervor for any great length of time. Others place the blame of the country's slowness of progress upon the system of administration.

W. F. Ferger, another economics instructor, claims that

SESSION LASTS 4½ HOURS

Passes Motion That Members of Audit Board Be Elected Rather Than Appointed; Motion to Rescind This Action Is Lost in Involved Discussion.

After a four-and-a-half hour session last night, the Student Activities committee tabled action on the proposed changes in the student government as advocated by the Student council.

Due to the fact that a number of student members of the committee had to leave during the discussion, it was felt that any vote at the conclusion of the meeting would not be indicative of the committee's opinion.

More Time Needed

After a lengthy discussion, the predominant opinion was that the present plan of government was functioning satisfactorily, however it was felt that more time was necessary for adequate consideration.

Just before the close of the meeting, J. M. Lear made a proposal that members of the audit board be elected rather than appointed. The committee favored this by a vote of 14-11. Later a motion was presented to rescind this action, but was lost in the heat of discussion.

The new plan of government, as formulated by the Student

Francis Fairley opposed the bill in saying that the co-eds have no trouble in getting dates. Albert McAnnally declared that a date bureau would make the co-eds less aggressive and less coquettish.
