

Board Chooses Harper Barnes To Direct Graham Memorial

Student Body President to Take Office in August; to Have Position Two Years.

WILL SUCCEED ALBRIGHT

Is Third Student to Hold Post; Noah Goodridge Was First Director, Mayne Albright Second.

The Board of Directors of Graham Memorial announced yesterday the election of Harper Barnes of Lillington as director of Graham Memorial. Barnes, who has served as president of the University student body and ex-officio chairman of the Student Union board of directors during the past year, will take over his new job in August, 1934, and will hold office for a two-year term.

Barnes is the third student to hold this position, Noah Goodridge serving during the opening year, 1931-32, and Mayne Albright from August, 1932, until succeeded by Barnes next August.

Under the present policy of the board, which it has followed since the completion of the union, the director of Graham Memorial can hold office only two years. This plan is thought to be advantageous in that the man in charge of the student union will always be a recent graduate close to the undergraduate activities with which he, as director, will have to deal.

The board of directors, composed of nine students and six faculty or administrative officers, is comprised of: President Frank Graham, R. B. House, Dean F. F. Bradshaw, H. F. Comer, Maryon Saunders, Dr. Hubert Haywood, Janie Jolly, Harper Barnes, Virgil Weathers, Stuart Aitken, Morty Ellisberg, Buck Harris, Dave Mosier, L. H. Fountain, and Claiborn Carr.

ENGLISH REPORTS SENT TO SCHOOLS

Statistics Compiled from English Placement Tests Last Fall Sent to Principals.

Under the auspices of the University extension division, the department of English yesterday mailed to each of 700 North Carolina high school principals a four-page letter concerning freshman English here and containing a summary of the records made in the first-year English courses by each principal's graduates during the last seven quarters.

In addition to informing each principal as to the standing of his graduates, the reports contained charts on which the tabulations from the Barrett-Ryan English test, which was given to the incoming freshmen last fall, were used to show the comparative standings of each of four groups of freshmen.

The distinctions which were used in drawing the charts are as follows: the freshman class as a whole, those incoming students trained in state high schools, those students from out-of-state schools, and 3,127 freshmen who took the test simultaneously in 74 colleges over the country.

According to the data from the test, in which the highest possible score was 150, the state-trained freshmen averaged 95. This number was contrasted with 97 for the entire class, 101 for the out-of-state group, and 104 for the 3,127 other freshmen. The high score for the class as a whole was 145; the lowest rating was 23.

The compilation of these reports was directed by Professor A. P. Hudson, chairman of freshman English, and was made possible by a small allotment of FERA aid to pay the four student assistants who performed the clerical work.

PRACTICAL VALUE OF OCCUPATIONAL GUIDANCE SHOWN

Experts Attending Vocational Guidance Convention Give Demonstration to Group.

EXPERIMENT SUCCESSFUL

Vocational counselors, personnel directors and industrial leaders, assembled here yesterday for the fourth day's session of the Southern Conference on Vocational Guidance and Education, gave a practical demonstration of the value of courses in the high school curriculum designed to help pupils choose wisely their occupations.

A score of pupils from the Chapel Hill school were ushered into the presence of the assembled educators, and then a couple of experts in vocational guidance, Miss Leona C. Buchwald, director of the guidance department of education of Baltimore, and Leonard M. Miller, director of guidance in Rockland County, N. Y., conducted a regular class in occupational guidance.

The demonstration proved a great success, due in part no doubt to the excellent instructors who proceeded to deal in such terminology as "characteristics of occupations, development of an occupational goal, present number of occupational occupations, likes and dislikes, abilities, character tests and attitudes, and opportunities."

Analyzes Studies

An excellent analysis of occupational studies was reported by Dr. Morris S. Viteles, professor of psychology in the University of Pennsylvania who pointed out that occupations in America are being more and more specialized and that about 80 per cent are in the unskilled and semi-skilled class.

Discussing guidance in rural areas at a session presided over by O. Lathan Hatcher, president of the Southern Woman's Educational Alliance of Richmond, R. S. Proctor, Craven county superintendent of schools, said the boys and girls in the four rural schools in that county were encouraged to remain on the farm and improve methods.

More than 200 alumni executives from many colleges throughout the country attended.

J. Maryon Saunders, University alumni secretary, addressed the convention on "The Extremist—How to Treat Him in Files, Clubs, and Classes."

Speaking on the subject, "The Responsibility of Alumni in the Present Educational Crisis," Grisette pointed out that the alumni of our various colleges are, by virtue of their superior educational training, the logical people to launch a new revival in the interest of higher education.

BOOKS REVIEWED AT BULL'S HEAD

Miss Nora Beust's Class in Book Selection Gives Afternoon Program.

Five members of Miss Nora Beust's classes in book selection participated in the program which the school of library science gave yesterday afternoon in the Bull's Head under the direction of Miss Betty Gray Long.

Agnes Harrell gave the first review of the afternoon, discussing "Just Plain Larnin'," a novel by James M. Shields, who, as a teacher in the tobacco town of Winston Salem, wrote of the obstacles in the way of the educator.

Following the first speaker, Mary Kent Seagle reviewed "I Went to Pitt College," and read parts from this book, which was written by a young college graduate who observed the lives of the miners around Pittsburgh. "Robber Barons" was next taken up by Sara Hanlin.

Mary Bradley and Charlotte Flynn gave the last two reviews. Miss Bradley's novel was "Fireweed" and was a story of frontier-like existence in a Michigan lumber camp. "Ridgeways" was a novel on the south in the Civil War.
