PARAGRAPHS

And from the intentions of a major part of the campus, Doc Craig's course will probably have to be given in Kenan stadium.

The way the New Deal is distributing 49,200 documents for one mechanic, it looks as if F.D.R. has found the forgotten man.

The incoming Tide will no doubt fill the Bowl to overflowing.

Honor Among The Freshmen

The new freshman president is starting out on his tenure of office with an appointment of a committee to study the honor system. He stressed the failure of freshmen to observe the conditions of the honor system, and hopes that the work of the committee will serve to instill in the minds of the present freshman class a feeling of honor in their relations here.

Committees and programs devoted to this same purpose have been instigated here before, but up till now they have been mainly nominal and inactive. The field for action and a definite stand on this question is self-evident. If Mullis succeeds in his plan, he will have accomplished something few freshman presidents in the past have, a fulfillment of pre-election promises.

Congratulations are due to him and to the committee that he has appointed.

Governmental Housecleaning

Second only to unemployment in these United States is the ever present menace to American society—crime. Even here crime is placed second only because unemployment is a more recent and a more immediate problem; that is, it has become a foremost ill condition to be relieved by the federal administration within the past few years. Crime, however, costs the nation annually approximately two and a half times what unemployment relief consumed during the past year.

Governor Ehringhaus of this state recently appealed to the United States as a whole, as well as to the law administration of his own state, to inaugurate a sweeping campaign to terminate that evil. Federal officers have in previous years launched drives of the sort advocated by the governor, but they have all been sadly short-lived. These former thrusts have been encouragingly successful while in operation.

Ehringhaus, in stating the main reasons why crime prevention in this commonwealth is not faring better (and he might well have allowed the reasons to apply to the country in general), enumerated the two most important as being: 1) disorganization of the law enforcing agencies, and 2) inadequate personnel.

This latter is doubtless the most imminent of the two, inasmuch as it points toward those members, inevitably present in all governmental departments, who are suckers for bribes and who are potentially crooked. If it were possible for the governor in his house cleaning to weed out such individuals, his project would be well on the road to success. He might try this at least, and the installation of officers, county agents and the like, who have recently been elected and are shortly to be installed, is not a bad place to start.

Taking Profits Out of Warfare

President Roosevelt stirred up a tempest when he asked a group of powerful federal and industrial leaders to prepare legislation for the coming Congress which will take the profit out of war and assure orderly mobilization of American men and resources in the event of future conflict. The president's action was severely criticized by members of the Senate munitions investigating committee, which feels that this step will halt and check the investigation now being carried on.

President Roosevelt wants to get a definite piece of legislation against wartime profit making through the present session of Congress. The most important recommendations for the new legislation include equal treatment and distribution of labor, safeguards against inordinate rises of wartime prices, and conservation of guidance of private capital for essential uses during time of stress.

The committee's accusations seem to hinge on the fact that it is afraid that the work will be discounted. Its apprehension seems to us to be justified. The committee has uncovered a cesspool of blood-money and has made revelations that heretofore have not been public property. It has gone about this investigation to show the impotence of arms legislation when confronted by a munitions lobby. Anything that even remotely resembles a hindrance to a complete probe of the situation would be contrary to the public good. Let the investigation be concluded, then legislate. And in the meantime, let every newspaper in the country publish the filthy transactions of these "merchants of death." It will be a powerful deterrent to war.

A Hand for The Glee Club

The Glee Club is a campus institution composed of a comparatively small group of students who devote three hours of their more or less valuable time a week to practice, and they have succeeded in getting up a repertoire of some ten songs that is far from bad. Grady Miller has been on the job at every practice during the quarter and has even gone so far as to institute an extra practice once a week for those new men who felt that they could benefit from more individual instruction.

The University Glee Club occupies on this campus a unique position, incongruous when compared to the position occupied by the glee clubs in other large universities. To be a member of such an organization in universities like Harvard and Yale is a recognized and sought after honor. Here the members are comparatively unknown unless they are active in other fields also. Yet, the quality of the University Glee Club's work stands on equally as high a plane as the choral work in other schools.

Campus attitude toward trained group singing is, as in other lines of endeavor, lethargic. Lamentable though this is, the remedy can lie only with the individuals. Until this attitude changes, the Glee Club will probably have to resign itself to its fate, and have as its reward appearances in other schools and its own personal satisfaction of a job well done.

Fun for The Kiddies

Yesterday afternoon we had quite a time getting the South building magnates to decide about the date on which Christmas recess solemnly ends.

After a long official argument officialdom granted us an extra day. We're tickled!

Credit Where Credit Is Due

Editor, the DAILY TAR HEEL:

May I express to you in behalf of the entire business staff appreciation of your editorial commending our present organization plan. Student understanding and confidence are especially essential to the best performance of this office. They are necessary also as a firm foundation for the alumni loyalty and support of the future. These considerations will lead us always to encourage the interest and advice of student leaders relative to our problems.

I deem it important, however, to call attention to a possible wrong interpretation of your editorial. The policies and arrangements that you have been good enough to commend are not so much an innovation as a gradual development over a period of years. They embody the ideas and judgment of the entire local business staff, under the wise guidance of the controller, Mr. Charles T. Woollen, and also the suggestions of other University officers.

While glad to accept responsibility for the adoption of the plan, I wish to make it clear that credit for its good features must be widely distributed.—L. B. ROGERSON, Ass't Controller.

Changes Being Made In Geology Courses

Geology courses are being revamped and are being made more practical by effecting a greater relationship to the modern business methods, according to an announcement from the department head yesterday.

The course in commercial geography or geology 52 offered by the department of geology is to be given in the winter quarter with a decided shift of emphasis to make it more applicable to present conditions.

The course in the geology department will revolve around such problems as the disposition of the Saar Basin, the recent Japanese aggressions, and the Balkan troubles, with emphasis on the manner in which they affect world trade. The purpose in the drastic change in the geology courses is to give a general understanding of world commerce and a knowledge of some of the more crucial international problems.

Kalifornia Keep Kool! Koch Crossing Kountry

Playmaker Head to Discuss Folk Drama in Los Angeles.

Speeding across the continent of North America, up hill and down dale, sleeping and eating and-gazing out of pullman windows on the vast expanse of our native land, Professor Frederick H. Koch is on his way to Los Angeles to tell a group of teachers how to make folk plays.

Koch left last night on his railroad cruise to the west, planning to whisk across and back again before December 23, when he is scheduled to appear in Raleigh to read Dickens' "A Christmas Carol."

Many thousand miles must be traversed before the Carolina Playmaker head will give his six lectures, two a day, to the annual Teacher's Institute in Los Angeles. According to Koch, he will use as the general topic for his lectures, "Making an American Folk Drama."

Koch taught in the University of California and the University of Southern California in past summer school sessions, and the people of California will not be disturbed should Proff Koch climb off the west-bound express, drowsy eyed, sooty and tired. They know that no ride on an iron horse can shake loose his heart-full of folk drama.
