GREEN FEATURED IN NEW PLAYBOOK

Current Issue to Be Released This Week; Publication Completes Its Seventh Year.

Editor Frederick H. Koch announced yesterday that the current issue of The Carolina Playbook will be released this week with son Paul Green sharing the limelight in the new Playbook's pages.

Green, one of America's outstanding young playwrights and a former member of Koch's Carolina Playmakers, appears three times in the new issue of the Playbook.

"Shroud My Body Down" Concerning his "dream play" which so stirred the campus when the Playmakers produced it last fall, Green says, "Shroud My Body Down" is not a play of entertainment in the theatre sense of the word, but rather an experiment in mood and atmosphere.

"But even so, I'm glad to have made an attempt, however small, at integrating life and music on a stage. Some day, somebody will do it in a big way, and the result will be astonishing."

After this author's "foreword" to the play, the magazine reprinted the opening scene from "Shroud My Body Down," and the Green matter ended with an editorial on "Paul Green and the Symphonic Drama."

Contributors to the current issue of the quarterly include Julius J. Lankes, William Butler Yeats, N. W. Walker and John W. Parker.

With the new issue, according to Darice Jackson, circulation manager for the publication, Volume VII will have been completed making the total life of the quarterly seven years.

The Carolina Playbook, boasting subscribers in many various lands, was one of three drama publications to be exhibited at the Century of Progress Exposition in Chicago two years ago.

P. U. COMMITTEE ON KEYS MEETS

Publication Awards Situation to Be Investigated by Board.

Seeking a way of curtailing the large number of publications keys awarded annually in order to thus increase the significance of the awards, the committee appointed by the president of the Publications Union Board to study the large expenditures for keys met yesterday in Graham Memorial.

Although no definite resolutions were drawn up for presentation to the board, several suggestions were made and marked for further investigation before the committee meets again.

The most radical suggestion for changing the present system, under which individual keys are awarded by each of the four publications and it is possible for one student to receive tokens from all four, was that a uniform key be adopted for all the campus publications.

This plan, it was thought, will eliminate a considerable amount of unnecessary duplication and thereby reduce the cost to the Publications Union board.

In order to further decrease the number of keys given each year it was suggested that the time and merit requirements for receiving an award be raised and that a semi-rigid quota be set up for each publication.
