Frank Shore did not look brilliant against Norm Anderson, but the final score found him an easy winner. Anderson played splendid ball and hit solidly and frequently but could make no headway. Shore was a little too well developed for the Indian player.

Ike Minor finished the singles with an easy win over Bob Neill. Minor played cautious ball and rarely put the ball away. He allowed Neill to err and was always in the lead.

Levitan and De Gray justified various opinions as to their combined ability when they bested Husted and Guilord, New England Intercollegiate doubles champions. Dropping the first set, 7-5, they ran through a love set and, holding a 5-1 advantage in the last set, were fortunate to win out, 7-5.

The other two doubles went on in semi-darkness, Shore and Harris winning in three sets, and the Abels-Willis, Anderson-Neill match being stopped when the players discovered they were stabbing at imaginary objects. The Dartmouth team held a one-set lead at the time.

The scores follow:

- Guibord (D) over Levitan, 6-2, 6-3.
- Harris (C) over Husted, 6-0, 6-0.
- Willis (C) over Seeley, 6-4, 7-5.
- De Gray (C) over Mook, 6-1, 6-2.
- Shore (C) over Anderson, 6-1, 6-4.
- Minor (C) over Neill, 6-1, 6-2.
- Levitan-De Gray (C) over Guibord-Husted, 5-7, 6-0, 7-5.
- Harris-Shore (C) over Seeley-Mook, 6-4, 5-7, 6-1.
- Anderson-Neill (D) led Abels-Willis, 6-2, 7-7, darkness.

Whence Dictators?

Before the World War, all mass movements in Germany were by groups, acting separately with their own doctrines. In the post-war period, a mass movement that was based on principles, so common and so oft repeated that everyone began to believe them, took place.

The students and other groups who opposed this mass movement were not organized, they did not have the support of the government, and thus were without hope or effect.

In commenting of the laissez-faire principle in government, Dr. Lederer intoned: "I think it is a very bad policy because it is no policy at all."
