STUDENT RESPONSIBILITY

The controversy perennially aroused over student dance conduct has blossomed forth again. Despite the fact that these are repeated outbursts, they are important.

At the Student Welfare Board meeting Monday, faculty members minced no words in letting the student members know that their dance, or rather, after-dance, conduct was disgraceful. The faculty has never placed any direct restrictions on students to curb after-dance disorder; all existing regulations were made by students themselves. But that does not diminish the importance of the faculty condemnation.

We think that after-dance conduct is not as bad as it's cracked up to be, but that there is obvious room for improvement. We haven't seen the immorality which is reported; the noise is bad but it doesn't spell lasciviousness. But the regulations as to retiring hours of feminine guests has consistently been broken, not so much by campus co-eds as by visitors. And it's not the fault of the visitors so much as the fault of their escorts here.

If the students would realize that these rules were made by students, because those students wanted to safeguard their privileges, that the abrogation of these rules puts them and the University (definitely the latter) in a bad light, that no annual rumpus would be raised if they'd use their heads about these things—then perhaps we'd see a change in attitude and action. It's a difficult job to argue with a faculty member and try to vindicate student behavior when the burden of proof and disproof lies on the students themselves.

This is another case where the students have the freedom and responsibility to act in their own behalf. It is not so much that we're lamenting the fact that the students in general and the fraternities in particular are oblivious to what they have to do; it is rather that we're anxious to see them assume the burden which is theirs, to get returns in the exact proportions to the amount of energy and sympathy they put into their efforts.

HYGIENE COURSE

We are in great need of a good hygiene course for all incoming freshmen. By this we mean one that will cover health, sex and first aid. By "good" we do not mean a course about birds, bees, flowers and trees, but a course in Mr. and Mrs. Human Being. We need a clear, frank, factual man-to-man course.

This course because of subject matter would be in direct sympathy with our infirmary schedule. This advice should be considered as much a required infirmary service as is our present medical cure. If the University can pay the infirmary doctors for the additional service, then all the better; if not, we believe it still would be the infirmary doctors' duty to teach such a course without additional compensation until the University can afford such a salary raise or administrative shift.

The course as proposed would not require much time of the instructors; as we understand it, a one-hour lecture a week throughout the year would be sufficient instruction to cover all the essential material. It does not necessarily have to merit a credit in the curriculum unless the administration so desires.

We believe the course could be worked into the new curriculum schedule. We believe it should. In previous issues we have pointed out the need for such information in the dormitories and fraternities. Perhaps on the basis of administrative application to all freshmen would this instruction be best carried out.

Other colleges and universities have made this step. If it would involve too much financial expense, we would not propose it for Carolina. But it does not. It could and should be adopted.

From a COLLEGE WINDOW

By WILLIS S. HARRISON

We suspect that this, our last column for the year, should contain as much evidence of deep thought as we're able to muster. And perhaps mixed with that should be the dismal warning that has been given to seniors for the past few years to the effect that they're going to face a changed world.

Instead of this ponderous and brain-racking effort, however, we're going to clean out our desk drawer and our notebook and get rid of all the clippings and what-nots laying around.

First comes a bit of humor of unknown vintage which was handed us weeks ago by Francis Clingman when he was under the impression that this is supposed to be a funny column. In view of the co-ed situation we ask your permission to dispose for once and all of this offence to the Muses:

"Consider This Work of Art"
College men want their women—
To be like cigarettes:

Just so many; all slender
and trim,

In a case,
Waiting in a row,
To be selected, set aflame,
and Discarded.

More fastidious men prefer women

Like cigars:
They are more expensive,
Look better, and last longer;
If the brand is good
They aren't given away.
Good men treat their women

Like pipes:
And become more attached
to them,
The older they grow
When the flame is burnt out,

They still look after them,
Knock them gently
(But lovingly)
And care for them always;
No man shares his pipe.
—Kentucky Kernal.

Our excuse: one has to please
THE man who reads this column.

We've already passed by notes on a liberal education, student reform, southern honor in favor of a lost item appearing in the Daily Princetonian: "Lost—Bridgework for teeth of upper jaw. Somewhere on Nassau St. or campus."

Things we wouldn't run before: The faintly amusing story of the professor at the University of Tennessee was having some difficulty in getting the attention of his class.

"I will not begin today's lecture," he said, "until this room settles down."
Was heard a sympathetic voice from the rear of the room: "Go home and sleep it off, old man."

Warning to the reformed Buccaneer: Last week 3,000 Harvard students staged a purge on their campus, seizing and burning 6,000 copies of the "nudist number" of the "Lampoon," their monthly comic. Police and the fire department were called. The magazine was banned from the news stands and mail as "immoral, blasphemous, and profane."

MATHEMATICS CHANGE

Dr. Archibald Henderson, head of the mathematics department, announced yesterday that only one class in Mathematics 2 and one in Mathematics 2c would be offered in the fall quarter next year. All students who have not yet taken these courses are expected to do so at that time as they are being discontinued after the fall quarter due to the new program of study.

FAIR PLAY

To the Editor,
The DAILY TAR HEEL:

Being an athlete, I was naturally interested in Mr. Kellar's letter in Tuesday's DAILY TAR HEEL. I believe I am in a position to know a little more about "the canker that is rat-like gnawing at the foundations of sportsmen's sports" than one who, as far as I know, has not participated in athletics at the University. After intimate association with athletes and questioning people who should know, I can find no case in which the Athletic Association has given money to an athlete. Of course, athletes are given jobs to earn their expenses, but what objection can Mr. Kellar have to that? After all, don't these athletes furnish diversion to many students, alumni, and others? Do they not give the University prestige throughout the south and the nation? I wonder what Mr. Kellar has done to increase the prestige of the University?

I believe some athletes hold scholarships, but isn't there a scholastic requirement on all scholarships? Possibly loyal alumni pay the expenses of some of our athletes, but what right has Mr. Kellar and other inquisitive students to question the way the alumni see fit to spend their own money? I know certain athletes who are outstanding scholars. Does Mr. Kellar want to refuse them scholarships because they are athletes?

In conclusion I wish to say that I know very little of the statements and accounts of the Athletic Association, but I have given you the results of my observation of the athletic situation.

FAB HAYWOOD.

COLLEGE PRESS

University Men In Business

The report of university placement officials that more graduates are being placed this year than any year since 1930 is highly gratifying not only from the standpoint of the graduates themselves but also to the many undergraduates who have been looking into the future with pessimistic and discouraged eyes. The report is more than the neat rows of statistics showing the number of placements in the various departments and their increases over previous years; it seems to us to be a clear indication that the hard-bitten business man is at last looking at the college graduate as an asset to the business world.

Manufacturers have at last departed from the view that a University education must be pounded out of a man before he can be useful. It was the depression, we believe, that has convinced the business world of the worth of the college-trained man. After the crash of 1930 when frantic business men began weeding out the less efficient of their forces it was found that a surprising majority of the men left were college-trained. Another fact that astonished these business men, whose favorite prosperity jokes were about university graduates, was that in the period of business reorganization the college-trained worker fitted into and better understood the new and various tasks forced upon the individual of the concern to carry on through the lean years than the specialized worker. The manufacturer and business men saw these things and began to wonder whether his prejudice against a university education wasn't a bit unfounded. On closer observation of the work of his university graduate employee he decided that his prejudice was wholly unfounded, and further decided that the benefits of a well-rounded education should be taken advantage of in business.

In the last few years there has been a steady increase in the demand for university men in business. With economic conditions as they are, with efficiency and ability at a premium, this demand shows the new view of education that business is taking.

The big jump in the number of graduate placements this year might be interpreted as a hopeful sign of business improvement in the country as a whole. Concerns have been running with a minimum number of employees as a result of the great weeding out process at the beginning of the depression. The fact that they are now looking for new men for their staffs points to the supposition that they are expanding to take care of business their depleted staff cannot handle. This is encouraging. But what is more encouraging to us is that the business world is finally recognizing the college-trained man, a recognition gained by a victory of merit over deep-rooted prejudice.—Daily Cardinal.

Class Calendar

gives his permission and the departmental committee gives its approval."

No Cuts Allowed

At the suggestion of Dr. T. J. Wilson, Dr. J. W. Lasley proposed the following addition which was passed: Attendance on such lectures will not be considered a valid excuse for failure to attend regular classes.

The phrase, "the day before these lectures are to appear on the calendar," was stricken from the proposal so as to permit lectures to be announced two or three days in advance.

New Executives

Drs. Hudson and Edmister were elected to the executive committee to take the place of Drs. Wettach and Spruill, whose terms of office end this year.

The faculty extended for another year the plan by which the executive committee refers to the student council all cases involving the honor system, but reserving the right to consider any case which the instructor wishes to have acted upon by them.

The committee which considered the class lecture calendar consisted of Dr. Leon Wiley, chairman; Dr. G. C. Taylor, Dean D. D. Carroll, Charles Poe, Irving Suss, and Nelson Lansdale.
