RUMOR UNFOUNDED

Growing horror in the form of a vicious rumor that an attack of spinal meningitis threatens the cosmopolis of Chapel Hill pervaded the campus this weekend. There is absolutely no justification or foundation for this report.

Rumors of this sort are the consequences of hasty judgments, of jumping to faulty conclusions for which the originator has no groundwork of facts. The rumors are not in the beginning either malicious or intentionally vicious, but are based on a gnawing fear of insidious and deadly disease. Man has a right to fear these things, but he has no right to conjure up specters of death before the eyes of his fellow man if the specters are only the figments of his imagination.

The medical authorities of the University are thoroughly competent, and would keep nothing as vital as this from the students. It would be all to their advantage to warn the likely susceptibles of an impending danger, and the students may rest well assured that they will do so in case of any emergency.

In the future, take the time to inquire as to the legitimacy of your facts before you are a party to any rumor which can get out of hand before explanations can be made.

DUKE AND CAROLINA

Duke and Carolina will get together on the gridiron this Saturday in what is usually regarded as the best game of the year for the spectators and the players alike. That anything is liable to happen in the way of scoring has made this traditional tilt a headliner in the South and even in the nation.

For years student leaders at both institutions, impelled by this athletic rivalry, have striven for better Duke-Carolina student relations. The interchange of undergraduate speakers, the programs of co-operation in the upper schools, and numerous other steps have definitely cemented the Blue Devils and the Tar Heels in a friendly and not an antagonistic rivalry.

There are always some students in both institutions (this is trite and re-hashed consistently but still a truism) who have little sense of this good sporting attitude, however, and often both student bodies are branded by the others by the unthinking acts of this minority. It is our earnest hope, of course, that these students become more conscious of the standards of their respective student bodies and cease childish and foolish pranks which arouse any antagonism. If, however, there must exist this element in all societies, our hope is then that the respective student bodies regard their activities as unrepresentative of the groups as a whole.

The disgraceful episode of painting the Duke chapel several years ago and the more recent action on the part of some who were ostensibly Duke students in similarly decorating Kenan stadium in black letters condemning Carolina to the nether regions must not continue if Duke and Carolina, near neighbors and schools which gain much through co-operation, are to build up a friendship that will continue to be healthful and constructive.

WE WAX LAUDATORY

Despite the fact that the politicians had a little trouble getting the incumbent campus editors located in the right shoes, it is our humble opinion that our fellow mates have done a marvelous job with their publications from the very start.

There has been, historically speaking, plenty of inter-publication animosity, rather feeble stuff, but vicious enough. Not through any "blushing violetness" on our part, but because we sincerely believe that our contemporary publications are maintaining a particularly high standard, do we invest local editorial policy with unprecedented praise for the others.

Some agitation on the part of a few students against our having all four publications is not representative of the attitude of the whole campus, in our opinion. We believe that each and every publication has a definite place and that, in the case of our contemporaries, they are as good as any in the nation.

"Dontcha remember?"

Sociology Professor Howard W. Odum had asked his class to bring in definitions of sociology. One star pupil came to school the next day and requested an audience.

"Dr. Odum," he said, "I ran across this definition of sociology and I would like you to hear it and see what you think about it. . ."

The boy read a very complicated piece from a dusty volume, looking up at the end to catch Odum's reaction.

The professor smiled, shook his head. "The words sound familiar, but no, that won't go. . . that won't do. Where did you find it?"

"You oughta know," replied the student. "You wrote it yourself. . ."

Bliss

Totally ignorant of Carolina's famous honor system, the freshman landed in Chapel Hill and jumped into University life.

Three weeks later, after rushing season, he had his first quiz. When the professor asked for PLEDGE he wrote: "Phi Delta Theta."

Life is just a bowl. . .

Stolid Coach Snavelly loosened his vocal chords yesterday afternoon at football practice: "You're My Lucky Star," "Ya' Gotta Sing Before Practice." It was Broadway Malady for someone. . .

Fake!

Charlie Chaplin's making another movie, producers tell us, which will be a fitting sequence to "City Lights" and the other ones. All of which reminds us of the story told on the famous English walking-cane star.

It seems that Comedian Chaplin, Charles Spencer without the baggy pants, stopped off in a little town for an hour's wait. Hearing that the locals were staging a Charlie Chaplin Imitation Contest, he decided to enter himself. He won second place.

Bare Facts

So one of the performers (male) in the Sophomore Figure Friday night refused to wear socks and appeared brazenly without them. He did wear shoes. . .

Maybe a hill-billy should make a good cook since he will be at home on the range. . .

And this Ensemble Conductor Arthur Fiedler who appeared on the Student entertainment series last month—he's a violinist. . .

One Man's Meat

A new Jersey friend of ours sadly tells us that some connection of his used a history report in high school this fall that he had originally turned in here at Carolina last year. Our friend had made an "A," but the second fellow to use the paper rated only a "D" . . . and it was a Carolina "A" and a high school "D."

Prevalent

According to reports from early navigators, fish were so plentiful in New Found America that boats could not possibly sail up the rivers for the piscatory blockades. . .

Some vessels even sank with the weight of the fish who jumped into the boats as soon as they appeared near the coast. . .

Yield Not

There was the Phi Kappa Sig week-ender who wore elbow splints to make it easier for him to resist temptation.

SCIENCE STORES ARE CENTRALIZED

Administration Takes Over Chemistry Store as First Step

It has just been announced by G. Morris Hill, head of the University purchasing department, that the chemistry store, located in Venable hall has been taken over by the Administration. The chemistry store has been controlled by one department in the past, and also served only this department. H. J. Crawford, who has been in charge of the store, will continue his duties.

The chemistry department has given its full approval and endorsement of this plan. Dr. Edward Mack, new head of the department, has also approved the change, and has seen this same situation successfully enacted at Ohio State University.

Central Store

The administration decided it well worth while to set up one central store for all scientific departments instead of one individual store for each department. Supplies will be bought in one large quantity for all departments in this group in the future, and should prove to be a money-saver for the University.

This change of control in the chemistry store has been a gradual process, partially due to the growth of the University, and the expansion of the medical, pharmacy, and other science departments.

Tennis Robot

Tennis enthusiasts will have a new type of opponent to work on this week when the "Tennis Robot" is put into practice on the University courts.

The robot is an intricate machine which shoots 60 balls to all parts of the court at intervals of a few seconds and may be placed at any position according to the type of shot a player wishes to practice.

The machine has been purchased by the University of North Carolina for the benefit of students who desire help in tennis. The device will be used for the varsity and freshman tennis teams as well as the students.

Under the supervision of Captains Shore and DeGray, the robots will be open to any one in the University.

PI PHI TEA

Patronesses and alumnae are invited to a tea this afternoon from 3 to 5 o'clock at the Pi Phi house.

Miss Hardiman, house Mother, Miss McCall, and Mrs. Lawrence and the active Pi Phi members will receive the guests. The pledges will serve.

Now YOU'RE Talking

"DOGMAS"

To the editor,

THE DAILY TAR HEEL:

It is disappointing and disheartening to find a preacher in a university town of 3,000 students, future leaders of the church and state, describing theology as an "attempt" and "dogmas" as "pictures." It is my belief that the gentleman does not know what a dogma is!

Ask mathematicians if the dogmas of mathematics are "pictures." Ask scientists if science is to them "variable terms or pictures in which he states to himself that experience." The answer will be emphatically "NO!" A dogma is not a term. It is not a picture. It is truth, crystallized truth. And might I remind the reverend gentleman that truth is absolute, never changing. Yet his pictures in which man states to himself his constant transaction with the mystery behind things are variable! To state that "dogmas" are pictures is not only a misconception but a contradiction. Dogmas of theology are rocks of its foundations which, despite the change of grandfather's clothes, remain unaffected, those essential truths which remain constant.

Instead of bringing us up to theology, he wants to bring theology down to where we are. Instead of taking the horse to the barn, bring the barn to the horse. Take your pick. One is as rational as the other. Regardless of the conditions of time, a truth is a truth and every pulpit in this country should impel us in that direction. If our proposer says his "dogmas" are terms and pictures, it is clear he confuses "theology" with "religion."

Mrs. Brooks Renders Classical Program

Pianist Gives Inspired Interpretation Before Audience

Gladys Calder Brooks, pianist, played to a small but appreciative and enthusiastic audience at a concert in Graham Memorial Sunday afternoon.

She gave an inspired interpretation to a well rounded program of classical selections.

Her program included: "Chaconne in G" by Handel; "Fantasie, Opus 49," "Etude, Opus 25, Number 9," and "Etude, Opus 25, Number 11" by Chopin; "Lotus Land" by Scott; "The Lark" by Balakirew; "Etude, Ricordanza" by Liszt; and "Paraphrase on Tchaikowsky's 'Flower Waltz'" by Grainger.

fought and killed because they were ordered to fight and kill."

Present Conflict

The question of the present conflict was introduced when Dr. Graham stated, "the ironic fact that while we are celebrating the peace of the world, there is a war going on. We should have a sense of futility in trying to organize our boys so that they experience the patriotic feeling to go out and kill," Dr. Graham urged.

In his further discussion Dr. Graham stressed the need for world peace. He gave a true and vivid picture of airplanes dropping bombs on cathedrals, churches, and schools. The damage done is far too great to compare with the purposes achieved.

German Club

All the dances will be held in the Tin Can. Bids will be available next week at the usual price for German Club members, $5 dues and $4 assessments, making a total of $9 for the set. For all undergraduates desiring to join the organization, the initiation fee will be $5, except for seniors, who may become members for the nominal sum of $1. Graduate students and alumni may obtain a set of bids for $5.

A large number of the campus socialites are expected to forego the pleasure of a family reunion Thanksgiving in order to hear Tommy Dorsey and his band on their first trip to this campus.
