carrying the implements of their trade, brooms, baskets, shovels, and trays. A triumphal procession it was, and the University servants themselves were hardly more proud of their "dean" than were the alumni and faculty members present to witness Uncle Billy's citation and honorary award.

Frank Porter Graham, then professor of history, delivered at that time the first citation of his career. His words of praise follow:

"Mr. President, we have the honor to present a dusky son of the Old South and a loyal janitor of Old East and West, a man known and loved by more alumni than any colored man in North Carolina. We present him in the name of the long line of University men whose clothes he washed, whose rooms he swept, whose water he brought, and whose sleep he broke. Though he waked us, yet we loved him. Greater love have no men than this that they love the man who waked them on wintry mornings. Bill McDade has waked more white men than any other colored man in the history of North Carolina. He has waked more sons of the University than any other man save the bugle boys who sounded the reveilles to sleeping armies. Never fear, Bill, the bugle times of war have gone and in these piping times of peace your record as the champion waker of University men will remain unbroken until Gabriel blows his horn and wakes a sleeping world for the great tomorrow.

"Here today, Mr. President, in the presence of the sheltered sun to whose setting he is resigned without quitting, with his hand on the job but with his faithful face set toward waking on tomorrow morn, we present him by virtue of his honesty, his courtesy, and his loyalty as a Carolina man, for the honorary degree of Broom Master-of-Arts, honored by his own folk, loved by Carolina folk—Bill McDade."

It is only when a man starts putting his feet on the desk that the office starts going to his head.

ceived during the college year including the previous summer, from others than those upon whom he is naturally dependent for support. In case any question arises with regard to the implication of this statement, the matter shall be referred to the executive committee of the conference for decision.

AW, HANG UP ON 'EM!

Wonder of wonders! Robert Young is arguing with Claudette Colbert, when he's usually the lad who spends every waking moment trying to figure out new ways of pleasing her! And how come the usually hard-boiled Fred MacMurray seems so happy? The three popular stars head a large cast of noted players in "The Bride Comes Home," which comes today to the Carolina Theatre.

was 84, only six years younger than my father. How long it has been. When I was a freshman living in Old East, Uncle Billy used to carry water from the well for us. You know, it was the proudest day in his life when I conferred upon him an honorary degree at commencement. All of the Negroes who worked for the University were present. It was the most dignified and solemn assemblage that I have ever seen."

Cherished Degree

"And he carried that degree and the newspaper clipping with him all the time," Phil Hammer declared. "Once we asked him to talk at a University Club meeting, and he brought out that clipping and read it to us."

"When I went to see him last, he asked me to name all of the pictures hanging in his room and in the hall of his house," continued Dr. Frank. "They were all pictures of janitors who have worked here, and I could name all but one. So I asked Uncle Billy who the boy next to the end was. Of course, he was unable to see from his bed, but he could tell me right away.

"And it was really remarkable the way he kept up with boys who graduated here 40 years ago. He knew them all and loved them as much as they loved him."

Recollections

The fire flickered on. Each student recalled what Uncle Billy had done for him and recounted some little bit of conversation that had passed between them. Each cherished whatever connection he had with the old janitor. All were deeply moved by the news of his death. If Uncle Billy could have seen and felt all that went on in that room, he would have properly understood his indissoluble unit with the University for which he has worked so faithfully all his life. Now Uncle Billy becomes one of the cherished traditions of the University.

More Than 60 Co-eds Present at Last Night's Meeting

Tempe Newsom was elected president of the newly organized Y. W. C. A. last night as the group met for the second time. Other officers elected were: vice-president, Gretchen Gores; secretary, Mamie Rose McGinnis; and treasurer, Elva Ann Ranson.

More than 60 co-eds were present at last evening's meeting. The Y. W. C. A., which was formed last week under the sponsorship of Alpha Kappa Gamma, honorary society, is the first organization of its kind on the University campus.

and worked for his mistress while her husband, Fomie McDade, was at the front.

When Carolina re-opened after the carpet-bagger regime, young McDade attached himself to the University's employ. Since that time he has served in Old East dormitory when his main job was carrying water from the Old Well to the boys' wash rooms, and in many of the fraternity houses, including Phi Delta Theta, Sigma Chi, and Beta Theta Pi.

When Graham Memorial was opened he took over a share in the janitorship of the student union, which post he actively held until his recent heart trouble two weeks ago.

Uncle Bill, for long chief "Waker-upper" for Carolina students, held a pre-eminent place among the colored people of the community, according to his friends.

A member of the African Methodist church, he was a steward and class leader. He was a trustee, treasurer, and chaplain at one time or another in both the Negro Odd Fellows and the Negro Masons. And once he was he was Noble Governor and prelate in the order of the Household of Ruth.

Confident

Well-to-do for a colored man, Uncle Bill had established himself as a confidant for people of his own race and as a helpful "listener" for many Carolina students. He held his position as treasurer for the Odd Fellows for over 18 years, despite the fact that all the other officers were constantly changing. Speaking yesterday, some of his fellow townsmen commented on the length of his service as treasurer. They said they kept giving him the job because he was "honest and pious" and everybody was "sure" of him.

Several years ago the old janitor was asked why he'd lived so long. His reasons: "I jes guess 'se lived so long 'cause I'se worked hard, all de time doin' sumpin' and get up early. I'se jes tried to do right and treat folks right."

Little America

In the past week the Administration has roughly sketched a substitute plan that appears likely to do all that the old AAA did as well as to undertake the readjustment of conditions that had previously been undisturbed. Taking the South as an example, the new plan will retain the price of cotton, by increasing profitable production and by decreasing, eventually wiping out, sub-marginal production. Southern farmers will receive cash adjustments for planting soil-building instead of soil-destroying crops where the soil is not capable of producing normally profitable returns; where areas return normal profits, the farmer will be paid to increase his yield. If the plan that is being now considered by the President and his advisers is adopted, agriculture will have taken an important step toward conserving the nation's land-resources as well as acquainting the Southern farmer with the advantages and necessity of crop diversification.

Unfortunately, like the old AAA program, the new proposal has not connected Southern agriculture with the "plight of the share-cropper" except in spirit. One of the reasons why farm incomes in the South are about half the incomes earned by farming in other sections of the country is that 60 out of 100 farms in the cotton belt are run by tenants and that the great majority of tenants refused few benefits from the old AAA. Just as landlords since 1933 have gathered to themselves most of the government's cash adjustments by restricting their own acreages and not their tenants, so it is to be expected that they will continue to do so under the new plan.

Agriculture's third phase will come when the Federal Government, scratching the soil without the assistance of landlord or credit merchant will find that the basis of the old cotton culture is the tenant farmer.

The conduct of the spectators at last night's game was much better than has been shown before. The unusually bad booing and hissing could have cost Carolina the State game last Saturday night.

BARNES

"I'm afraid none of us yet realize what a loss the University has suffered in his passing. I have never known a finer gentleman nor had a better personal friend. As much as any graduate of the University Uncle Bill was the personification of the Carolina gentleman."

YANDELL

"Uncle Bill McDade was without a doubt one of the traditional landmarks of this University. His life of simplicity, devotion, and perseverance should be an inspiration to all who knew him. White or black, he held their esteem."

POOL

"The student body is grieved by the death of Uncle Bill. The simplicity, humility, and richness of his life will forever be a source of inspiration to Carolina students. He was a gentleman in every sense of the word, and words cannot adequately express his unselfish service and devotion to our University that he loved so well."
