Harvard Professor Gives Historical Sketch Of Clause

Weil Lecturer Traces Constitution's Famed Clause Through Career of Marshall

DESCRIBES CASES

Explaining the use of the commerce clause in the federal constitution by Chief Justice John Marshall in preserving a proper balance between the powers of the nation and the states, Felix Frankfurter, noted Harvard law professor, said in an address last night that the Supreme Court in American history bears witness to the famous justice's influence.

Delivering the first of the annual series of Weil lectures at the University in Memorial hall, Professor Frankfurter spoke on Chief Justice Marshall and the commerce clause as the first part of the general topic, "The First Hundred Years of the Supreme Court and the Commerce Clause."

Introduction

President Frank P. Graham introduced the speaker, and Dean Dudley D. Carroll, of the commerce school, chairman of the faculty committee which arranged the series this year, gave an explanation of the Weil lectures.

Describing the three cases, namely Gibbons v. Ogden, Brown v. Maryland, and Willson v. The Blackbird Creek Marsh Company, which came under Marshall's jurisdiction, Professor Frankfurter said that the famous justice's opinions "are not to be judged only as literary documents—they are events in American history."

Faith

"Temperament, experience, and association converged to make it easy for Marshall to use the commerce clause as a curb upon local legislation," Mr. Frankfurter pointed out. "The need of a strong central government as the indispensable bulwark of the Union." (Continued on last page)

Caffey, Lawlor Express Disapproval of Rules Barring Sophomore-Freshman Women

By DOROTHY SNYDER

The majority of co-eds on the campus heartily disapprove of the regulation forbidding the admission of freshman and sophomore girls to the University.

Chi Omega President Frances Caffey, when asked her opinion on the matter, said that while she could see the point in not admitting freshman and sophomore girls because of the freedom allowed the older girls, some solution to this problem could be worked out. Caffey believes that a more normal social life could be attained with the presence of more women, and also a more active participation in sports and campus affairs. In addition to these facts, she stated that the admission of freshman and sophomore girls would bring with it the establishment of additional sororities on the campus.

Lawlor Comments

Nancy Lawlor, Pi Phi president, said unhesitatingly that she thought sophomore and freshman girls should be permitted to attend the University. She said that Carolina is a state school, and should be open to girls of this state. "Things are offered here that one can not take at a girl's school," President Lawlor pointed out.

Girls whose homes are in Chapel Hill seem to feel more strongly about the matter than

Complete Report of Committee Findings Will Be Released In Tomorrow's Paper

DISLIKE SEVERITY

Tabulated replies to the honor principle questionnaire answered by students last month were yesterday released by the Student Council.

Answers were given by approximately 1,000 of the University's 2615 students. Only one-fourth of the 1,000 indicated that they would report a violator of the honor code.

Answers to the questionnaire, printed below, have been compiled and studied by Phil Hammer's honor committee. The committee's complete report based on the questionnaire will appear in tomorrow's paper.

Tabulation

Questionnaire replies follow: I. Under our honor system as it exists would you report a violator of the honor principle?

Yes, 187; no, 769; percent yes, 19.56.

II. Failure to report violations of the honor principle is recognized as a violation in itself. Do you believe that such failure should be regarded as a violation?

Yes, 269; no, 685; percent yes, 29.43.

III. Do you believe that the success or failure of the Honor Principle in student life depends upon every student's reporting violations?

Yes, 398; no, 597; percent yes, 40.

IV. State briefly your ideas about the severity of penalties for varying classes of violations, i. e., nature of violation, class or University tenure of violation, first or second offense, etc.

Out of 912 answers, 495, or 54.16 percent, favored leniency (e. g., no suspension) on first offense. Other answers varied so greatly as to be of no consummate value to the committee.

V. What do you think is the fundamental purpose of a penalty for the violation of the honor principle: to punish or correct?
