• Self-Government?

The minority group of the honor committee has presented before the student body a proposal for placing five faculty members on the Student Council and additional professors on a new set-up of class councils. This recommendation, coming after 46 percent of the recent questionnaire answerers had voted for a joint-faculty council to direct the honor system, is an attempt to make the honor system more efficient by giving the faculty direct participation in its administration.

In proposing student-faculty administration of the honor system, the minority report aims, first of all, at taking advantage of the greater maturity, training, and experience of members of the faculty. Secondly, since the faculty is an integral part of a community striving to uphold honor, the minority group seeks to make the honor system more democratic by giving faculty a place on the Student Council. Thirdly, the minority feels the professoriate, the permanent members of the University, would give to student government a stabilizing continuity.

Without the co-operation of the faculty, student government in a University community is practically impossible. Some method, as the minority report implies, must be worked out to stimulate faculty interest and co-operation in student government.

But the problem is whether we want to jeopardize the educational values of student self-government by putting professors on the Student Council. If we put faculty on our honor councils, will the student body feel the same responsibility for the success of their own campus government?

• Laryngitis

In the summer of 1927, the University of North Carolina Glee Club, under the direction of Paul John Weaver, sang their way into international prominence, making notable appearances in America and Europe.

On the way home from London, they were offered contracts for summer work in England the following summer. That fall and winter the organization, holding a prominent place in campus activities and bedecked with flashy executive committees and business staffs, continued its ride along the Glory Road with fine precision. Tours to the deep South, north to Richmond, and intensive schedules over North Carolina produced newspaper reviews and silver loving cups. Glee Club material for "Coach" Weaver's outfit was subject to present day football speculation and prognostication. . .

Talent from all parts of the country looked to Carolina; the University's fame "outside" was extended by the popular warblers in tuxedos who sang any and almost everything with "appeal" finesse. Their pictures flared into wide view over the country; Brunswick records spread "Hark the Sound" far and near; at home they had no Hill auditorium of their own, then.

Maybe it's just the glamor that hangs over the usual "Good Old Days," but there was "something" about those fellows who could tear up "Me And My Little Banjo."—J. M. S.

The New Generation

Henry Lewis
By Bob Perkins

"The Carolina theatre is the seat of my interests," states Henry Wilkins Lewis, editor for the University's 1936-37 Yackety Yack.

Henry, a graduate of Virginia Episcopal School, has worked on the Yackety Yack since he has been at the University. A senior, majoring in history, he has vague ideas of entering law school,

Coffee Hound

When one is unable to locate Henry at the movies, he can probably be found indulging in a contemplation of life at the Carolina Coffee shop. This is always true after 10:30 at night.

In spite of his seemingly leisurely habits, Henry is not only a good student, but has taken an active part in extra-curricular activities. He is an A. T. O., member of the University Club, and the German Club.

He has served on the sophomore and junior class executive committees, was the head of the class division of the Yackety Yack during his sophomore year, and has taken an active part in the affairs of his fraternity.

Henry hopes to organize his annual staff as far as possible this spring, but he states that the actual work of his staff will not begin until next September.

"Hump" Snyder of football fame went to the May Frolics wearing tails, top hat, etc. When a friend approached him and said: "What is all that you are in, Hump?" His answer was: "In cognito."

Billy Yandell, ex-president of the Y. M. C. A., has secured work with the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company after graduation this spring. Yandell is one of 15 college students selected to be trained for executive positions.

Mike Disher and Frank Trotman are the shining lights of the campus now since they have peroxided their hair to a brilliant gold—to win, according to a rumor, a three dollar bet.

Goodbye, Tradition!

For years the Fleece has stuck to a conventional program, on which appeared a well-known speaker. In its entirety the program lasted nearly two hours.

All the thrills will remain in the new ceremony, according to tight-lipped Fleece men who would reveal no more than that. But the listless features of former rites will be abolished. The campus community, say Fleece men, will never forget Tuesday night's program in Memorial hall.

Membership in the Order of the Golden Fleece is recognized as 'carrying the greatest honor the campus can bestow upon an individual. Last year the Fleece tapped nine students. The number which will be chosen this year will not be known until the tapping activity Tuesday.

Present members of the order are Tom Evins, Phil Hammer, Harry Montgomery, Harper Barnes, Ernest Eutsler, Charles Poe, and Jim McCachren. Inactive members are Alex Andrews, Joseph Sugarman, and Clyde Dunn.

WILL IT BREAK?

Symposium: Peaches and Cream

More Food

To the Editor,
The DAILY TAR HEEL:

There are some corrections that should be made concerning the article in the Sunday DAILY TAR HEEL about the food in Spencer hall. Even after giving the writer of said article a little room for exaggeration in order to prove her point, there are still a lot of statements that cannot be called mere exaggeration.

We have found Mrs. Lee always open to suggestions concerning the meals and any dissatisfaction could have been settled with her. In any event, the majority should always rule. This is a southern school, and most of the girls are from southern homes, so why shouldn't we have grits, eggs, and toast, to say nothing of the fruit or fruit juice and the choice of cereal that the previous letter failed to mention. Just last week we had waffles and sausage twice for breakfast. Doughnuts and coffee are quite nice, but we feel sure that more people prefer the other menu-even if they don't like grits.

There is no reason for saying that the board is $30 a month when it is actually $25.50.

What We Do Have

We have never had a meal consisting of spinach, turnips, tomato salad, and carrots and peas, nor have we had one of cheese on toast, potatoes, rice and corn fritters. If the author will recall she will find that for dinner we always have a meat, a starch, one cooked vegetable, and a salad, with bread, coffee or milk, and dessert. For lunch we have a main dish which serves as a substitute for meat, such as macaroni and cheese, cheese toast, bacon and tomato sandwiches, and several vegetables, a salad, and always some kind of preserves or apple sauce, with bread and milk or tea.

Had the section devoted to peaches been true, it would have been very clever. It is true that we have them once in a while with cookies, but not more than once a week—though we didn't have them at all last week.

Aside from the commendation of the cleanliness and service at Spencer hall, the letter was unfair. Instead, there should be one written to praise Mrs. Lee's thoughtfulness in allowing us to have special Christmas and Thanksgiving dinners and the coming May breakfast on the lawn.
