Philosophy Of Life

(EVERETT DEAN MARTIN)

New situations must be met in new and still more new ways, yet always in such a way that these basic human interests for which men have always struggled be not lost, but in each readjustment augmented and made richer in objective.

Intelligence Reborn

TOMORROW THE University has its birthday party, and like all University affairs it will be a highly intellectual party, a meeting of intellectual leaders.

This commemoration is a representative symbol of the activities of a university. We should all pause today and take stock of what this intellectual University has been, what it has been to us, and along what line we should proceed from now on in our relation to it.

We are all proud of some of the things the University has done, its intercollegiate records, its social functions, its sons who have achieved success. But tomorrow's holiday should bring back to us that these things are not the University, are merely its appendages. We should realize that the University is an educational institution, an institution designed to give those who come in contact with it a liberal foundation on which they may base their life.

So tomorrow, when the University becomes one year older, it would be a wise thing for its present students also to age, to become a little more adult mentally, and to pause to see if they are receiving the full effects of the University.—E. L. K.

Graham Plan

WE ARE ALL constantly being warned by the newspapers and magazines to beware of athlete's foot. Yet there is one common result from athletics which is far more dangerous than athlete's foot, namely, athlete's head.

At this particular time of the year an epidemic of the disease is sweeping our country and everyone taking part in athletics should be especially careful to avoid it. This is due to the large crowds which attend the college football games and infest our teams with all kinds of unhealthy notions.

Once the disease gets hold on a player it is very hard to get rid of it and it seems that only the strongest and finest athletes are able to escape it. The symptoms are quite obvious and are everywhere recognized as one of the most repulsive characteristics that a person can acquire.

Unfortunately the disease cannot be cured with a doctor's prescription or druggist's preparation, in fact, it is generally incurable and therefore should be avoided at all costs.

The best prevention for athlete's head is to possess an unegotistical mind, a large degree of modesty, and a true appreciation of teamwork and cooperation.—Miss S. D.

SAND AND SALVE

By Stuart Rabb

"Where ha'e ye been, Al, my son, Oh where ha've ye been, my fair Alfred?"

"To the Elephant's lair, called G. O. P., There ha'e I been, my sweet party."

"And what saw ye there, Al, my son, Oh what saw ye there, my fair Alfred?"

"Hamilton, Knox, and the Little Man Alf, These ha'e I seen, my sweet party."

"What said they of me, Al, my son, What said they of me, my fair Alfred?"

"That you bankrupt the nation and woo the Red Russians, Thus say they of you, my sweet party."

"Now why pack ye your derby, Al, my son, Why pack ye your derby, fair Alfred?"

"I leave you this day for the G. O. P., Hence do I pack, my sweet party."

"Then get thee hence, thou pariah dog, Oh, get thee hence from me, Alfred."

"I go, I go, Oh Party Renounced, You can forward my mail to the Morgans."

Hit Of The Week

House and Wilson

Dean of Administration ROBERT BURTON HOUSE (left) and Registrar THOMAS JAMES WILSON, JR., decided last Wednesday that New Year's lectures would not be much fun after all, and set January 4 as the first day of winter classes. For making this change the student body unanimously proclaims them the Hits of the Week.

Correspondence

Letters Over 250 Words Subject to Cutting by Editor

★ ALLAH BE PRAISED To the Editor, The DAILY TAR HEEL:

The issue of January 1 class has by now been practically forgotten, but the students of the University should not forget to express their appreciation to the faculty for the fine way in which they decided the matter . . .

By acting as they did the faculty showed us that we have various ports in which we can steer our ships of problems to seek wisdom and advice.

Let us express our gratitude to the faculty for such a display of broadmindedness, at a time when the tentacles of anger and bitterness could so easily have grasped control, to breed a feeling of opposition between the faculty and students. For making it possible to spend the New Year's holiday with our people whom many of us have not seen since September, we should also extend our thanks.

Woodhouse Says We Should Admit Freshman and Sophomore Women

In the article below E. J. Woodhouse, popular professor of political science, sets forth his views on the question of admitting freshman and sophomore women to the University at Chapel Hill.—Ed. Note.

This University belongs to all the people of the state. Every department and resource of the University should be fully available to each individual and each group in the state unless there is some overpowering reason to bar such availability. There seems to be no great disadvantages attached to the admission of women freshmen and sophomores to each of the three branches of the Greater University.

It is said that their presence in the Chapel Hill unit would create difficult social problems and that, for this reason, women must be excluded from this branch until they are ready to enter as juniors. Admitting that somewhat arbitrary dividing lines must sometimes be drawn, can we say that the social problems of freshman and sophomore women are so serious and so different from those of junior and senior women that the University is justified in excluding women from the first two years of University life at Chapel Hill? Are not the social problems of freshmen and sophomore men just as much more difficult than those of junior and senior men as are those of women in the first two years of college life greater than in the third or fourth years? What right have University authorities, servants of all the people of the state, to decide, without better reasons than these that they will thus discriminate between the men and the women of the State? Who but the young woman citizen herself and her parents should decide to which branch of their University she will go during her first two college years?

Social Injustice

This social injustice will be, and should be, done away with, whenever the young women of the state and their parents insist sufficiently upon their rights and object vigorously and steadily to this violation of their rights. The University exists to serve all the people of the State and should and can solve any special social problems incident to the presence of freshman and sophomore women in the Chapel Hill branch.

The exclusion of Chapel Hill and Orange county girls from this branch in freshman and sophomore years is essentially a part of the general problem for all girls of the State. In general all citizens should be treated alike throughout the State. But, since the exclusion has been just on the ground of special social problems created, it would seem that the families of women students can assume those social problems where the students live near enough to live at home and attend the University in Chapel Hill.

Ralph W. McDonald is through with political campaigns for the time being at least. He was nominated for president of the "freshy" class of the law school, but stated that he had recently completed a strenuous campaign and did not feel that he was equal to another one at the present.

Aaron Baer Glicksberg scores again. He canvassed his dormitory selling programs to the Tennessee game. When he came to the fourth floor all was quiet. Aaron banged on the nearest door. A sleepy occupant slowly opened it. Aaron started his gab about not being able to tell the players without a scorecard. The sleepy young man almost threw him out. It was Pete Avery, who played no little part in bringing Carolina a win over Tennessee.

Ed. Baker is making his ability as a salesman pay him good dividends. He is meeting his college expenses by acting as selling agent for several nationally advertised products.

Lib Wall went to the dentist in Raleigh Thursday. "It always takes two people to work on me," she stated. "One has to hold me, while the other works on my teeth."

Jimmy Applewhite, popular vocalist who sang at the first Grail dance, spent last summer touring the country singing for Jimmy Allsbrook's orchestra.

Irv Niditch, Bean city product, is looking all over the city of Durham for the culprit that put a dent in the fender of his brand new second-hand car. He asks, "Is this Southern hospitality?"

Bernie Eichler, alias Roxboro kid Murray Laskey, and Buddy Organblick went to Durham to see some girls whose address had been given them. After a mile and a half walk they were greeted by the girls' father with a hearty, "Scram, you kids!" They made the long walk back in utter disgrace.
