bill was carried.
The second bill, "Resolved, That a national referendum should be necessary for the United States to declare war," was also approved.

Senator Large thought a referendum a good idea because the few people who declare war mainly for the purpose of making money cause the death or injury of the masses who must go to war or go to prison.

Senator Hobbs disapproved of the bill because at a time of national strife people are led by propaganda and would approve of war because of unjust opinions formed.

Senator Steele closed the discussion by adding that it is no longer the fashion to declare. Since the President is the commander-in-chief of the army and navy he can send troops to any country any time he likes so a referendum would not mean much today.

cation in our colleges and universities.

Specialist

A good college athlete is a specialist who has spent years of hard labor and sacrifice in his effort to reach the top. When he goes onto the field he risks injuries to give thousands of sports loving Americans entertainment. He is a clean, intelligent young man who has a lot of energy and enthusiasm. The college athlete, contrary to popular consensus of opinion, is greatly interested in an education, and is, as has been proved by many of our leading colleges and universities, a better student than the average non-athlete.

Many of these young men, however, are not financially able to go through school without some outside source of income. If they were not competing in athletics, it is quite possible that they would be able to earn enough on the side to enable them to go through school. Thousands of self-help students do this every year, but the athlete, just because he is an athlete, is usually scorned for wishing to receive an education by means of the job in which he has prepared himself. Why should athletic ability be considered less worthy of remuneration than any of those abilities which enable non-athletes to secure self-help jobs, such as typing, library work, etc.?

Student's Game

After all, football is a student's game, and their views on the matter should come in for some consideration. What do the students think about the situation? President Lloyd Newcomb of the University of Virginia, said Monday that his school "is co-operating 100 per cent with the . . . rules and regulations of the Southern conference." This was a very timely statement, and when one takes into consideration that only two days before, his team was walloped 65-0 by Harvard, one tends to wonder whether President Newcomb was bragging of, or lamenting the fact that his school submits so completely to these rules and regulations.

But what of his students? In a front page editorial, Tuesday, College Topics, the student paper, declared that Virginia should drop from the conference if "present rules regarding compensation of athletes" were not abolished. The article also proposed that athletes should be given their room and tuition free, and a job by which to earn their board. Can we blame these students for their distaste toward rules which they deem to be unjust? Their university is following these rules, that is, during football season, at least, and they are consequently taking licking after licking. These students do not want a world-beater, but they do want a team of which they will not be ashamed.

Effects of Policies

It is, however, not necessary to go to the Old Dominion to see the effects of the present conference policies on some of its teams. We have a good example of that right here in our own back yard. As the Tar Babies were taking a licking from a William and Mary freshman team which would not make an average high school student jealous, one of our fellow students was heard to say, "That team of ours couldn't make a first down against a strong wind."

Artist Supreme

It requires no imagination to discern the sleeping fires of the born artist in this portrait of Katherine Hepburn, fondly dubbed La Hepburn by many of her admirers. "A Woman Rebels," now playing at the Carolina theatre.

At least 95 per cent of the students on the camp of the 16 conference colleges and universities will agree that their athletes deserve some sort of compensation. They would require only that these men be students who are passing their work toward their degrees. The day of the tramp athlete is over; it takes brains to play modern football and pass modern courses at the same time.

Which way, Southern conference? Will the good fathers hark unto the voice of an overwhelming majority of their students; or will they endeavor to stem the inevitable tide of public opinion which demands that athletic ability be an aid rather than a detriment to a young student securing his education? Will the conference vote dry and drink wet again this year? December 12 will tell the story.

Friendship Council Listens To Speech By Rev. O. T. Binkley

Baptist Minister Talks on Christianity and the College Man

"Why a College Man Should be a Christian," was the subject of a talk by the Rev. O. T. Binkley of the Chapel Hill Baptist church, as he spoke before the Freshman Friendship council Monday evening.

Dr. Binkley emphasized three reasons why we should become Christians; because Christianity gives us the most adequate philosophy of life; because it offers the highest set of ideals, and because it fits us best to meet the demands of life.

After John Bonner had called the meeting to order and introduced the speaker, John Lynch gave the report of the social committee. He said that a social and joint meeting with the Freshman Friendship council of W. C. U. N. C. was in the offing for next Saturday. An informal at the Carolina Inn is tentatively planned. The devotionals were led by Frank Turner.

words, a motion was made and passed to discuss the motion further next week.

James Davis was elected assistant treasurer of the assembly over Joe Boak and Phillips Hamilton. Roy Clark won the vacant position on the Ways and Means committee over Stewart Ficklin.

A picture of the assembly in action was made following the meeting, and another one will be taken tomorrow morning at 10:30 in front of South building.

Sophomore 'Y' Group Hears Campbell Talk On Spanish Revolt

Joint Meeting with Greensboro Cabinet to be Held Soon

Bill Campbell led the sophomore "Y" cabinet's discussion Monday night on the present revolt in Spain and its effect on the League of Nations.

The speaker dipped into the history of Spain for illustration of his point on the continual state of revolution that has plagued the country.

President Bob Dalton opened the meeting for new business, and it was proposed that a social in the form of a joint meeting with the sophomore cabinet in Greensboro be considered. A committee was appointed for this and the date is to be set by them.

A talk on the World Service club, whose purpose is the furtherance of the "Y" throughout the world, was then given and immediately followed by a discussion of plans for next week's meeting in which they will be joined by the Junior-Senior and Y. W. C. A. cabinets. A meeting of the program committee was called after the regular session.
