CPU Speaker Makes Thrust At New Deal Tydings Cites History In Discussion Of Expediency

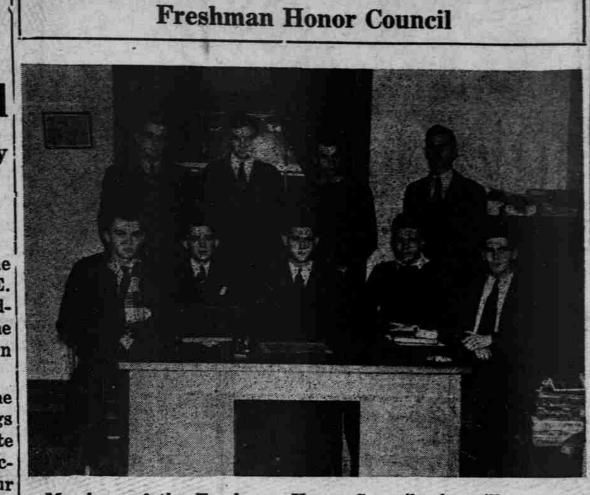

By GORDON BURNS In a round-about attack on the New Deal, Senator Millard E. Tydings, (Dem. Maryland), addressed the student body of the University yesterday morning in Memorial hall.

"In our attempts to solve the problems of the day," Tydings asserted, in striking the key-note of his address, "we too often sacrifice the lessons taught us by our predecessors for the sake of action, whether the particular action is conducive to the success of our undertakings or not."

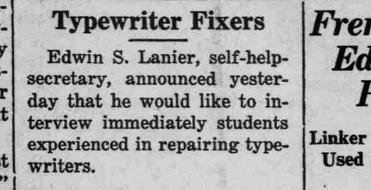

History

To illustrate his point, Tydings continued, "In the past, governmental regulation, especially in the case of the textile industries, has failed. France under Louis XIV, Greece and ancient Rome are positive proof."

"Very few countries can exist profitably within themselves," continued the Senator, in further stressing the economic problems facing the world today. "They need the necessities that other countries in the world are producing and they can't be bought unless they can sell their own products. Germany today is buying more from other countries than she is selling. Thus, since all her gold is going out of Germany instead of coming in, she has a bad trade balance and must rely on her credit and borrowed money to keep her population intact."
