Other business was attended to as the gala convention neared its end. The national defense program report calling for a standing army of 180,000, a navy second to none, and the continuation of reserve officers' training camps, was adopted by acclamation.

It was believed that the ex-service men will take no official stand on the supreme court issue or on labor's family struggle.

Many of the Legionnaires have already left the city for their homes.

Ivey Will Sell Any Articles In Swap Shop

Won't Be Responsible For Objects Of Large Size

Additional plans for the Graham Memorial "Swap Shop" were revealed by Director Pete Ivey yesterday, including an announcement that the articles may be left at his office, providing they are not too cumbersome for storage there. The management will not be responsible for old automobiles, mules or trimotored airplanes stored at the bartering center, he said.

The service, free to all, is to begin immediately. Anything that is on the "for sale" block may be carried to the student union building, Ivey said, and if it is some small item such as a fountain pen, typewriter or Phi Beta key it may be stored in his office, otherwise a description of the article will be posted on a bulletin board in his office.

If the service grows too large for the narrow confines of Ivey's office, plans have already been made for expansion. The small lounge adjacent to the director's office will be used as the mutual exchange center as the swap shop grows.

The title of the dean of administration's talk was "The College Flash and the College Dope."

Dean House, in going from the one extreme of the "college flash" to the other of the "college dope," mentioned the types of students to be found in our modern colleges. He better illustrated his groups by using slang terms he had saved over from his school days here at Carolina, said "slang denotes interest."

"A shark," Dean House said, "was one who could put something over on a prof." This form of achievement was known as "blinding" and it was a smart student who could tell of blinding a prof. while on the other hand there was little to brag
