LETTERS To The Editor

(Continued from page two) Bend Sinister. This is frequently seen in French and German heraldry, but avoided by English heralds, possibly because it has been confused with the Baton Sinister . . . There are two diminutives of the ordinary (bend sinister): the Scarp, which is one-half the bend, and the Baton Sinister, which is one-half of the scarp, and couped or cut off smoothly so that its extremities do not reach the sides of the escutcheon. The Baton Sinister is borne as a mark of illegitimacy."

I also quote from so common an authority as Webster's New International Dictionary, second edition, 1934: "Bend sinister: a bend drawn from the sinister side, wrongly believed to have been a mark of bastardy."

"Baton: a bend, commonly a narrow bend, afterward believed to be a mark of illegitimacy. A baton with the ends cut off became such a mark in late heraldry and was borne sinister wise."

As a matter of fact the ordinary blazoned on the University shield is itself a sort of bastard, for it is neither bend nor baton. As a bend it should be drawn from the chief rather than the sinister side; as a baton the ends should be couped. Whatever it may be designated as, however, it does not represent any blot or besmirchment. I hope this matter is somewhat cleared up now and will once more be relegated to moth balls where it belongs.

Sincerely yours, William C. Fields.

Duke Beats Maryland

(Continued from page three) the second period by the champions of last year jeopardized the Clemson victory. Heading the attack, Spessard and Carson tied the score up 27-all with eight minutes left to play. Clemson retaliated with another basket, but again the points were deadlocked, 29-29. McFadden saved the night for his teammates, however, by dropping last minute goals, forging Clemson ahead into the finals tomorrow.

McFadden's 17 tallies yesterday and his 14 tonight give him high scoring honors for the tournament so far, with Spessard trailing with 29.

Duke-Maryland

A grinning Blue Devil wielded his pitchfork expertly here tonight and prodded a reluctant University of Maryland quint to submission in the last three minutes of play, winning 35-32.

Maryland fought swiftly to an early lead, and it took Duke 11 minutes to catch up and better their mark, 10-8. The score was then tied up, 11-all; however, the Terps crawled ahead and at the half were leading by the narrow margin of 15-14.

In the second period neither team registered a point until after five minutes of play, when Wheeler sank a field shot to widen the scoring breach. Walter Johnson's little son Eddie fouled out shortly after, and with five minutes left in the game Maryland led 29-27.

The timer said "three minutes" and Duke unleashed what reserve power it had left, taking a three point advantage. With seconds left, Edwards dropped in the last throw of the semi-finals to scoot his teammates into the championship battle with Clemson tomorrow night.

Edwards was high scorer for Duke with 12 points. Wheeler, ace forward for the Marylanders, finished with 13 beside his name.

Fencers Meet Kentucky

(Continued from page three) Tar Heels will travel to Atlanta, and return here in time for the home engagement with Maryland on the 19. The highlight of the southern tour will be the Georgia Tech encounter at Atlanta, traditional Tar Heel fencing rival.

Those Boys

Erratic as ever, Coach Coffin's fencers suddenly took a turn for the better the latter part of this week during practice to end up in fine shape. The swordsmen now appear more than ready for their meet tonight, and it looks as though it'll be tough going all the way. Yet that 9-0 edge for the Tar Heels will probably make a great deal of difference in the final count.

Political Union Looks Forward

Efforts are being made to work out a satisfactory date for Frank McNinch, who was forced to postpone his scheduled speech here earlier this month.

Commerce Secretary

Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper has indicated that he may be able to accept the date of March 30.

If the program permits, the union will attempt to secure a representative of the Chinese viewpoint to speak here sometime before the end of the quarter.

The CPU's second anniversary celebration has tentatively been scheduled for some time in May, and the speaker for this occasion has not been selected as yet.

Johnson Will Offer Instruction On Rome

Course Will Require No Previous Knowledge Of Language

Professor R. P. Johnson will offer a course in Roman civilization next quarter that can be taken without previous language instruction.

Designated Latin 76, the course will deal with political, social, and economic achievements of the Romans, together with their private life, amusements, manners, and customs. Details of Roman topography and monuments will also be taken up.

Work during the quarter will consist of illustrated lectures, assigned readings, and reports. The class is scheduled at 12 o'clock.

Lacrosse Coach Calling Recess

(Continued from page three) has been given, but its supporters claim that the game, once begun, will attract great attention from the majority of Carolina students. They hope the University will soon come through with full sanction so that the sport may continue in its beginning stages without what they style "unnecessary obstacles."

But while the store was getting off the debit side of its balance sheet, the cleaners with the installation of new equipment which had required more money, and stiff competition from the other cleaners, was having difficulty. As a result of these two factors and poor management following Weeks' resignation, the cleaners went into bankruptcy this fall.

After the Christmas holidays the clothing store's business suffered a decline which did not permit a covering of operating expense. As this continued through February the Publications Union board deemed it advisable to protect their investment of $3,500 and brought a court order against the store declaring it bankrupt.
