GERMAN CLUB

ELECTIONS—3 MINUTES FLAT

The German club elections were over in 3 minutes yesterday. The old crowd won every office.

Of course the meeting had been announced to the public and the whole membership of the German club. There had been a brief bulletin tucked away in the back of the Tar Heel (for it had been unimportantly sent in late the night before) . . .

German club elections don't really matter an awful lot; there is a lot of money involved, but the accounts are audited; there is a sizeable bloc of the campus officially enrolled as paid-members of the club, but they get the dances and don't particularly care about who's in the figure or on the dance committee.

It doesn't really matter that the German club elections are sprung upon us each year in flagrant violation of the spirit, if not the letter, of the campus rules of fair play.

MY LITTLE GIRL

(Montgomery Advertiser)

Today my daughter, who is seven years old, started to school as usual. She wore a dark blue dress with a white collar. She had on black shoes and wore blue gloves. Her cocker-spaniel, whose name is "Coot," sat on the front porch and whined his canine belief in the folly of education as she waved "good-bye" and started off to the halls of learning.

Tonight we talked about school. She told me about the girl who sits in front of her—the girl with yellow curls—and the boy across the aisle who makes funny faces. She told me about her teacher, who has eyes in the back of her head—and about the trees in the school yard—and about the big girl who doesn't believe in Santa Claus. We talked about a lot of things—tremendously vital, unimportant things; and then we studied spelling, reading, arithmetic—and then to bed.

She's back there now—back in the nursery sound asleep, with "Princess Elizabeth" (that's a doll) cuddled in her right arm. You guys wouldn't hurt her, would you? You see, I'm her daddy. When her doll is broken or her finger is cut, or her head gets bumped, I can fix it—but when she starts to school, when she walks across the street, then she's in your hands.

She's a nice kid. She can run like a deer and darts about like a chipmunk. She likes to ride horses and swim and hike with me on Sunday afternoons. But I can't be with her all the time—I have to work to pay for her clothes and her education. So please help me look out for her. Please drive carefully, please drive slowly past the schools and intersections—and please remember that children run from behind parked cars.

Please don't run over my little girl.

Garibaldi to his Roman Soldiers—

Soldiers, what I have to offer you is fatigue, danger, struggle and death; the chill of the cold night in the free air, and heat under the burning sun; no lodgings, no munitions, no provisions, but forced marches, dangerous watchposts and the continual struggle with the bayonet against batteries—those who love freedom and their country may follow me.

ANGLES

By Allen Merrill

Bob Magill called together a little group of eight students Thursday night to launch a program for introducing a campus legislature into student government.

Recalling last year's blood-sweating struggle on the part of a group of enthusiasts, Magill reminded the "starters" that the campus had rejected by a narrow margin the complicated, heavy, and idealistic plan of last year's committee.

After quoting a list of over twenty-five practical cases since September when some sort of legislative organ was either necessary or desirable, he urged the committee of eight to sponsor a legislative plan which was, above everything else, practical and easy to wedge into the present student government set-up.

Certainly no single group on the campus is in a better position to recommend a legislature to the student body than the student council.

If the committee of "drafters" keep their feet on the ground long enough to draw up a sound proposal by election date, poll-goers on April 12 can "mark" into student government the biggest innovation since the Student Council was organized in 1904.

POINT OF VIEW

By Ramsay Potts

A large corporation had violated the National Labor Relations Act and the case was referred to Mr. Bennett Schauflet, the Regional Director from Baltimore. The violation was an obvious one but nevertheless the corporation hired some high-powered lawyers to present its defense.

As the review before the trial examiner proceeded it became clear that the company had no answer to the charges brought against it. The counsel of highly-paid lawyers could only stall for time. Every day meant more fees, so that was the "wise" thing for them to do. The climax of the case came on the last day. Mr. P. D. Q. Tillinghast, the spokesman for the corporation counsel pronounced this dictum: "You cannot overlook the fact the Joe Doaks was discharged, not for union activity, but for soldiering on the job."

Mr. P. D. Q. felt righteously indignant about the plebian prostitution of his own "wise" tactics.

Mr. Schauflet accompanied Mr. Edwin S. Smith here for the latter's talk on the NLRB, given Wednesday night in Memorial Hall. They agreed that the simplest cases as to the application of the Labor Act, have been those involving big companies. The Ford's and the Remington-Rands persist in believing that might is right. Their violations are so clear as to present no problem of interpretation.

These large companies have of course used pressure on Congress to curb the NLRB's power. But all attempts to cut the appropriation of the Board, or to amend the act, have met with determined opposition. Despite the criticisms that have been directed at the Board by some prominent labor leaders the rank and file of labor organizations are zealous guardians of its powers.

The evolution in the public attitude is looked upon as a necessary step to greater co-operation between the Davey Clark's and their mill-workers. Not on the basis of paternalism, but through collective bargaining is the way labor wants it.

The NLRB is seeing that it gets its demand. "But," said Mr. Smith, "public criticism has been the most powerful instrument of pressure brought to bear on us. We need the confidence and support of the general public."

TORN TENDON

To the Editor:
Dear Sir:

Several days ago in your sport page there appeared an article concerning the prospects of the 1938 edition of the baseball team. The author of the article stated that the team would suffer considerable because of the ineligibility of several players among which was Herbert Abramson. Evidently the author of the article was misinformed about the status of Mr. Abramson. He is not ineligible as stated, but he is suffering from a torn tendon. I would appreciate it very much if you make a correction.
