Studies Language

E. E. Ericson Reads Paper On Language To Philosophers

Reading Results In Faculty Discussion On American English

Dr. E. E. Ericson of the English department read a paper on "Language as a Cultural Barometer" before the Faculty Philosophy of Science Club Thursday night. An hour's discussion among the faculty as to whether American English is being debased or enriched by taking over jargon of trades and professions and the argot of different social classes was the result of the reading.

In his paper Professor Ericson declared that "English abounds in striking semantic values as well as rich metaphors because from the beginning its supporters have recognized that language serves men, and not men language." He declared that Greek and Latin impacts upon English destroyed the "self-interpreting quality" of English.

COLLECTION OF WATERCOLORS TO BE ON EXHIBITION

Works Of American Artists To Be Shown In Person Hall

The first showing in the United States of an important collection of watercolors by American artists will be on view this afternoon in Person Hall gallery.

Dr. Russell T. Smith, head of the University Art department will give a gallery lecture at 4 o'clock on this collection and also on the group of engravings, etchings, and wash drawings by the French artist, Albert Decaris, in the small gallery.

The exhibition of water colors has been assembled by the Feragil gallery of New York for circulation as one of the outstanding traveling shows of the year. Thirty of the foremost American painters, including Winslow Homer, Arthur Davies, Thomas Benton, Paul Sample, and Luigi Lucioni, are represented in the collection.

Watercolor painting had not been developed as a major medium by first-rank artists until the last century. At present it is considered a worthy medium for finished works of art because of the advantage it has over other types of painting in spontaneity, freshness, and personal appeal. The old masters of the Renaissance used it for studies and preliminary sketches.

HONORS PROGRAM TO WIDEN STUDY

Reading Courses To Aid English Majors

Last year the English department, along with the other humanities, introduced a new honors program for majors in English for the purpose of allowing more liberalities in the strict English major curriculum.

This new plan permits able English majors to choose three reading courses that will broaden their field. They then work under a special committee composed of Dr. E. E. Ericson, chairman, Dr. H. K. Russell, and Dr. W. F. Thrall.

Oral Exam

At the end of their senior year they are required to write a paper and take an oral exam given by the department. When this is passed, they may graduate with honors.

Nine upperclassmen are now following this program and have found it very successful. It gives that certain amount of freedom that critics have been demanding.

To any possible English major who might be interested in the honors program, the members of the committee extend a cordial invitation to see any of the three and to "talk it over."

Spring Comes, Honey Melts, And Mr. Grumman Is Stuck

Honey Boy

R. M. Grumman, head of the University Extension division who had a sad experience with some bees and the approach of spring.

Extension Division Head Not To Tear His House Down!

Sitting down at his home several evenings ago, Russell M. Grumman, director of the University Extension division, felt himself ease into something soft and sticky.

Puzzled, he examined his chair closely to find out what had probably spoiled a well-dressed pair of trousers.

"When I tell you that it was honey and that it was dripping from the ceiling, you won't believe me," Mr. Grumman declared.

It seems that bees had, during the past year, gotten in various openings in the house, and congregated within the ceiling of the dining room. Not having noticed any bees about this spring, Mr. Grumman thought he had seen the last of them until he sat in the honey. He thinks they have been busy within the walls all winter, and that now the warm weather (Continued on last page)
