

Ficklen Says UP Will Stay Out Of Interfrat Election; Council Will Meet Tonight

Party Has No Connection With Any "Frame-Ups"

The University party will be strictly out of the picture when annual elections for the Interfraternity council are held tonight, Chairman Studie Ficklen said yesterday in answer to a story in the DAILY TAR HEEL which revealed an alleged line-up of rival fraternity factions.

First Statement

"Contrary to the article in yesterday's paper, the University party takes no part in Interfraternity council elections," Ficklen said in his first public statement since his election as chairman following the recent political campaign.

"Frame-Ups"

The article occasioning Ficklen's response exposed two alleged "frame-ups," one composed of Kappa Alpha, Zeta Psi, Chi Psi, Phi Kappa Sigma, Sigma Nu, Beta Theta Pi, and Sigma Chi; and the other made up of Phi Delta Theta, Alpha Tau Omega, Phi Gamma Delta, "and possibly Delta Kappa Epsilon and Sigma Alpha Epsilon."

Removed From Party

If such line-ups do exist, Ficklen viewed them as being entirely removed from party political lines. "It is evident that we have no part in these elections because the party's fraternities are almost evenly divided between the two so-called 'frame-ups' mentioned," he declared.

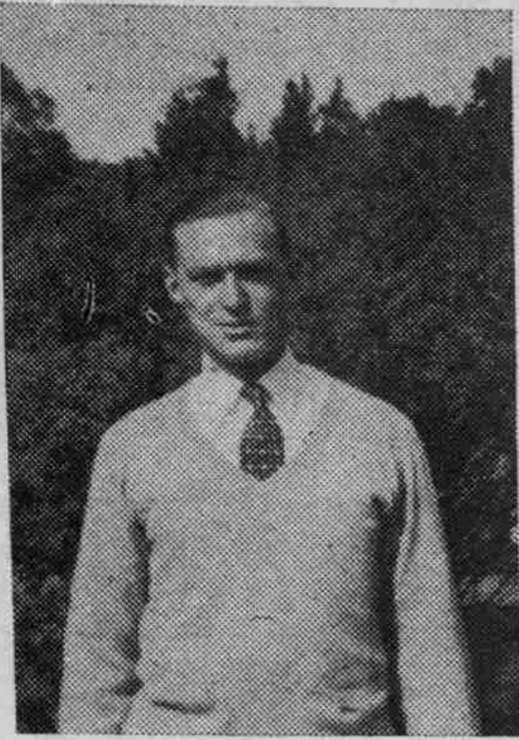

UP Fraternities

University party fraternities whose names appeared in the "line-ups" are Kappa Alpha, Zeta Psi, Phi Kappa Sigma, Sigma Nu, and Beta Theta Pi in the first clique, and Phi Delta Theta, Alpha Tau Omega, Phi Gamma Delta, and Delta Kappa Epsilon in the second group.

Independent Groups

"Any fraternities who are in these alleged 'frame-ups' are acting independently of the University party," Ficklen's statement continued. "It has always been the policy of the University party to keep out of these elections and we shall stick to that policy this year." 77

Chairman Speaks

Studie Ficklen, new chairman of the University party, who stated yesterday that the party was strictly out of the interfraternity council alleged "frame-ups" and would not participate in the elections.

OUTDOOR COMEDY TO BE PRESENTED TOMORROW NIGHT

Forest Theater Will Be Scene Of Production

The Playmakers, cooperating with the departments of music and art, will culminate their year's program in the presentation of Shakespeare's comedy "The Merry Wives of Windsor" tomorrow night, Saturday and Monday nights.

Down in the Forest Theater, elaborate scenery, designed by Professor Russell Smith, has been constructed and set up by Professor Harry Davis and his crew of students. A 50 foot arch stretches across the wooded stage with alcoves of true Elizabethan pattern. Electrician Paul Quinn has filled the surrounding trees with colored spotlights allowing much flexibility in the lighting effects. By training light on one alcove, shifting of scenery is permitted during the progress of the play.

Dances

Under the direction of Lynn Gault and Mrs. Ora Mae Davis, a group of 25 dancers practice spins and turns of the 14 century English folk dances that are to be given before, after, and during the play. The number in the last act is an original interpretation by Mrs. Davis.

A heavily padded torso, yard length sleeves, and intricate buckram head dress, are a few of the many costume problems that Mrs. Davis has confronted in preparation for this production. The torso is to thicken the girth of lusty Falstaff, played by Bob Nachtmann who is appearing in his last Playmaker production. In making these costumes Mrs. Davis has allowed the comic phase to dominate while following the old English style.

Speaker Uses Slides In Talk Last Night

"The Russian people are in the midst of a program of industrial and cultural expansion amazing in its scope and efficiency," was the keynote of the lecture presented last night in Graham Memorial by Dr. P. O. Schallert, physician and world traveller of Winston-Salem.

Accompanying his address with numerous slides made in Russia while he was guest of the Soviet Union in 1936, Dr. Schallert went on to discuss the unusual advancements made in all fields, especially that of education. Various textbooks from Russian schools were passed out through the audience during the lecture, and Dr. Schallert pointed out the tendency of the people to adopt American ideas for their education system.

He also went on to state that factory conditions in Russia are much better off than it is generally believed by the average American.

Kendrick, from Greensboro, is a member of Phi Beta Kappa and Sigma Delta social fraternity. He has been prominent in the work of the institutes of 1937 and 1935, as well as the campus literary societies. His latest post was chairman of the final session of the International Relations institute.

History

The Human Relations institute was begun in 1926 by the YMCA cabinets. It was organized on a four-year plan to bring to Chapel Hill leading speakers in various work and to give to students a broad-minded outlook on world problems.

During the conference in 1935, it was decided to make the institute biennial because of the speed at which world events were moving.

1939 To Be Sixth

The 1939 conference, which is scheduled for the week of April 2, is the sixth, and each year more interest has been shown by the campus, state, and nation, with greater attendance of students and off-campus delegates.

The general plan of the conference is to have at least twenty guest speakers, who address the delegates in public meetings and class room seminars.

Program

The program of the conference is formulated by a committee composed of fifteen students and fifteen faculty members, with the chairman an ex-officio member.

Kendrick said yesterday that the members of the committee would be announced early next week.

According to YMCA secretary H. F. Comer, Kendrick was chosen for his general ability and his exceptional interest in the past conferences.

Only Few Seniors Are At Present Definite About Activities After Graduation

By SANFORD STEIN

"I'm going to study —" "I'd like to do —" "I may get a job with —" "My plans are indefinite." These were typical replies of seniors who were asked what they intend to do after they graduate from the University. The only ones who really seemed certain of at least their near-future were those who are going to continue their studies or who are fortunate enough to have some personal business contacts. Ironically enough, some of the most outstanding students on the campus are those least sure of what the world will have to offer them. Below are the plans of a representative group (Continued on last page)
