

Playmaker's Theater To Be Rebuilt By January; Fire Precautions To Be Taken

Bynum Gym to Be Used Temporarily As Headquarters

The Playmaker theater, badly damaged approximately a month ago by fire, will be completely rebuilt in detail by January 1, 1939, Dr. Frederick H. Koch announced yesterday.

In addition to the restoration, proper fire precautions will be installed. An asbestos fire curtain, which the authorities think would have saved the structure before had one been on hand, a fire wall, and modern fire fighting equipment such as hose and extinguishers will be included.

New Equipment

Lighting equipment, curtains, cyclorama, rooms for make-up, and a complete touring outfit with a portable switchboard and scenery are being purchased.

After giving a story to yesterday's DAILY TAR HEEL that the Playmakers would be located in Chapel Hill high school auditorium as the administration had planned, Dr. Koch found that Bynum gymnasium would be available for use as a temporary theater.

The commencement platforms will be moved into the old building for a stage and a number of chairs are to be placed on the main floor to substitute for the theater seats. Black drapes will cover the windows, making a lighted stage possible.

All the equipment that is being bought for the renovated

Infirmary Closes Free Tuberculosis Clinic Today

All Students Urged To Take Advantage Of Tests, X-Ray Examinations

Today is last day of the annual student tuberculosis clinic held this week at the infirmary through the cooperation of the state tuberculosis sanatorium, according to a bulletin issued by the infirmary staff.

A special effort has been made to have all students tested and those who have not done so are urged to go to the infirmary today.

The test, a reliable indication of tubercular infection, is harmless, has no unpleasant after-effects, and costs nothing. X-rays of those showing a positive reaction are also made free of charge.

Those who have had positive reactions before are urged to be re-X-rayed this fall.

CHEERLEADER PAT PATTERSON CALLS FOR COOPERATION

Best Squad in Many Seasons Is Expected For This Year

All the cooperation and spirit the campus can give are the most important things the cheerleading squad needs this year, announced Pat Patterson, head cheerleader.

Patterson expects to have one of the best crews the University has seen in many moons, and emphasis will be laid on entertainment, tricks, and gymnastic feats, particularly during the football game halves. "Since many of these features will be surprises," said Pat, "it would spoil their effect to reveal them now."

The first call for tryouts was made last Monday and about 30 students came out. The group will be narrowed down the latter part of next week, and probably half the squad will be freshmen. Paul Harper is the only holdover member from last year. All those who want to be cheerleaders, however, still have the opportunity to try out, since the final selection has not been made.

"I'd like freshmen to know that cheerleading is a good extra-curricular activity and provides plenty of healthful physical exercise," said Patterson.

Surprise—5c

One of our less-conventional coeds once had a habit of leaving the contents of her soft drinks to the discretion of soda-jerkers. After a shopping pilgrimage in Raleigh this summer she parked in a drug store booth and when the white-clad boy asked for her order she laid down a nickel and said, "Just surprise me."

He stared at her for a moment, yelled "BOO!", picked up the nickel and walked away.

President Graham Formally Opens 145th Session In Speech In Memorial Hall

Hark the Sound!

This boy, any cheerleader, is a link binding the Carolina student body to its teams in action.

Explains Student Government, Campus Traditions

Formally opening the 145 session of University of North Carolina, President Frank P. Graham, spoke in Memorial hall yesterday, departing from the conventional type of address and devoting most of his talk to traditions of the campus.

"I am trying, he explained, "to help you get the feel of the place, so you will be able to carry on the precious heritage handed on to you by your predecessors."

Dr. Graham stressed the view that the institution's trustees, faculty, students and alumni "have always been noted for their loyalty, devotion and high ideals."

Student Government Is Old

"We have here a student government and an honor system that are almost as old as the institution itself. You have pledged yourselves to uphold the principles of that government."

Praising the loyalty of the faculty, he said that "during the darkest days of the depression—the darkest days the University has experienced since the carpet-baggers closed her doors—at least 60 members of the faculty turned down tempting offers from other institutions that would have increased their salaries by a total of $100,000 and elected to remain in Chapel Hill and help us fight out of the depression, strong in the faith that better days would soon come."

Rating Is Still Good

And though many had said at this time that the greatness of the University was doomed, Dr. Graham pointed out that the American council on education, after a recent survey based on ratings by departments, placed this University at the forefront of similar institutions in the Southeast.

Complacency and contentment with the University as it is, he declared, had been avoided like a plague, lest dry rot and deterioration set in. As an advance in this direction, Dr. Graham pointed out the recently established general college, comprising a basic two-year course of study for beginners, which was

PUGH CALLS FOR NEW BUCCANEERS

Editor Says That Mag Must Be Funny

Editor Carl Pugh of Carolina Buccaneer puts it this way in regard to the outlook for the campus humor magazine, "We're going to have more dust than dirt and as much dust as we can get away with... The magazine must be funny." A particular aim of the staff will be to use unusual, striking covers. First of the eight issues will appear October 10.

Freshmen, upperclassmen and others who are potential Frank Sullivans, Bob Burnses and Bob Benchleys are asked to report Monday night at the Buccaneer office in Graham Memorial for the first staff meeting of the year. Official time will be announced later in the Tar Heel's bulletin board. Everyone who turns out for the meeting, Pugh pointed out, will be on the staff for the first issue.

Several important positions on the staff are yet to be filled; students with unusual talent are asked to come to the meeting Monday night especially art, music, photography and sports aspirants.

Co-Ed Enrollment To Reach 400 Within Next Six Days

Breaking all existent records, registration soared yesterday to a total of 3,298 students enrolled in the University.

With six days left in the fall registration period, I. C. Griffin of the central records department expressed hopes last night of reaching the 3,500 mark. Last year's enrollment at this time was 3,207, a record already broken by 91 students this fall.

Although official figures will not be available until next week, it is believed that the total for freshmen will reach 850, and the total for women students generously exceed the 300 mark.
