• Test Of Allegiance

"The boys are playing football, how interesting," is Shelley Rolfe's description of the expression of the student body's support for the team at most of the pep-rallies held so far.

But we refuse to believe yet that Saturday's game in the North is just an exhibition of professional skill, or that the members of the team are not still inspired to fight harder when they feel evidence of support from the student body.

With a deep conviction that our trouble so far has been negligence in expression of our enthusiasm rather than the absence of enthusiasm, the DAILY TAR HEEL is sponsoring tonight's pep rally and tomorrow's grid-graph session in Memorial hall.

Tonight we learn whether our conviction is wrong. We will know whether or not we are setting up a hollow framework for the expression of something that died with the Virginia games of the nineties.

• Stepping Stones

Mid-term quizzes and reports are perennial stumbling-blocks for many students. They cause some painful revelations to students who meet the crises of examination and discover that they simply have not acquired adequate knowledge of a subject or that they are unable to organize and express the knowledge they seem to have locked in their brains.

Many students become chagrined at the results shown by mid-term exams. Some become seriously discouraged. Of course there are many who feel quite happy about the progress they've made in half a quarter.

If mid-term quizzes act as stumbling blocks, they can be made to act as stepping stones. It depends on the student's attitude. A poorly done quiz can discourage a student, but it can also impress him rather forcibly with the holes he's left in his fabric of knowledge. He can thereupon patch up the holes. The poor grade may stick in the grade book, but the student has "patched up the holes." That is the more important thing. The student may think he knows all there is to know about a subject. When he puts it down in little, blue quiz books, he gets the stuff all confused so that nobody knows whether he knows what he's talking about or not. If a quiz can make the student realize this lack of technique of expression, it can become a stepping stone toward better technique.—DeW. B.

• Birth Control

The fact that families in which the father and mother are college graduates have the lowest average number of children, 1.5 per family, of any similar large group in our population, might seem to be one thing showing that Mrs. Margaret Sanger's talk this morning in Memorial hall is unnecessary, that the college student will know much about the subject, and how to use this information intelligently.

But if birth control is a device for the ultimate benefit of society, Mrs. Sanger's appearance here should be a reminder that college students have the burden of spreading the intelligent view of the question and turning what has been learned about the subject to the best possible use.—W. K.

THE LAST Word

By Jane Hunter

Your scribe was faced yesterday with the alarming situation of being 20 years old for the first time. The shock of the sudden realization brought forth a bit of feverish research up in Mrs. Stacy's office. It was gratifying to learn, after pawing anxiously through the files, that of the 87 senior women enrolled this quarter, 30 of them are 20, and 26 are already 21. The age 19 comes a close third with 18 students of that age, and the rest scattered between 17 and 24.

It is interesting that the average for the 127 junior girls lies between 18 and 19, but the average for seniors is two years behind, lying between 20 and 21. Three juniors are only 16 years old and six are 17.

And, according to a hasty comparison, the graduate women are getting younger every year. Time was when the grad staggered about covered as adequately as possible beneath a pile of books so that nobody could see her white hair and toothless grin. Nowadays, you can't tell the difference between a feminine Ph.D. and a freshman pharmacy girl. Statistically, the fashionable age this year for the 159 graduate women is 21. There are 35 at this age, 19 are 22, and the rest are strewn between the mileposts of 16 and 50, with one standing guard at each end. Privately, we are a bit skeptical about the 16-year-old Playmaker prodigy, since she is a graduate of Columbia and has taught several years.

Pete Mullis, enterprising young capitalist of Old East, wishes to use this column as a channel for propagandizing his establishment. He suggests that as we book-laden coeds plod wearily home from the library in the middle of the night, Old East, being the half-way point, would be an excellent place to stop for a wee bit of refreshment. Just stand out in the path and yell "Pete," with your nickel ready please, and in no time at all you will have a chocolate milk in your mittens and be merrily on your way.

"It seems to me," said an indignant senior coed yesterday, "a pretty sad commentary on the famed liberalism of 'the most progressive state university in the South' that the students are not allowed cuts and urged to attend Margaret Sanger's lecture tomorrow." Nearly every coed in school is planning to hear Miss Sanger and few have shown any hesitation at all to take the class cut.

High School To Present "Congo"

(Continued from first page) the Junior Playmakers, as the high school students have been named. Plans will be made for conducting another session next summer.

A foreign viewpoint will be presented by Helene Scheu-Riesz of Vienna, speaking on the Vienna Theatre Guild. R. G. Walser of Greenville will lead a panel discussion of little theatre organizations. A demonstration in directing will be given by Professor Harry Davis, who will use members of his class. Elmer Hall, technical director at the summer theatre at Skowhegan, will discuss backstage organization, and John Walker, director of the lighting of "The Lost Colony" at Manteo, will speak on "Planning Lighting Equipment."

Football Team To Get Send-Off

(Continued from first page) oratorical mood. Wolf, suffering from a severe head cold yesterday, stated that he "would speak if his voice would work at all." Maronic, told that he would be expected to acknowledge the student's send-off, said that he would like to make arrangements for the team to meet him in Carrboro after supper.

Jim Davis and George Nethercutt, representing the University and Monogram clubs respectively, will work together with the DAILY TAR HEEL in boosting the rally.

"We want every student who can spare a few minutes of his time to be at the Inn at 6 o'clock," jointly announced the parties concerned yesterday. "The team needs every bit of support it can get, especially when going out of town with only a few rooters likely to be at the game."

The rally will not last more than 10 minutes, and will end when the players get on the bus for Durham, from which point they go by train to New York.

Mrs. Sanger To Speak

Mrs. Sanger is being brought to speak at the University through the combined efforts of the Social Work, Sociology, and Public Health Departments. Many of the professors in the sociology department have excused their classes so that they might hear the famed authority on birth control.

AAU To Meet With Mrs. Graham

A benefit bridge and tea party will be given tomorrow afternoon at the home of Mrs. Frank Graham by the American Association of University Women, the proceeds of which will go to the Women's Loan Fund. The tea, which will be preceded by bridge, is to be held at 3 o'clock and will be under the supervision of Mrs. Graham, Mrs. J. N. Couch, and Mrs. Clarence Heer.

Dr. Graham Will Speak At Mars Hill

President Frank Graham will be the chief speaker of the occasion at the inauguration of President Blackwell of Mars Hill college tomorrow morning. Although the subject of Dr. Graham's address is not known definitely, it is believed that it will be concerned with the problem of education in the South.

CAMPUS PERSONALITIES

By DONALD BISHOP

Big Steve Maronic is the man with the prodigious appetite who fills a mighty important place on the left side of the line for the Carolina football team. He is co-captain of the squad and would probably feel more natural if classed as a Gridiron Personality, but today he is described as a campus figure.

"I've eaten all my life," Steve jokingly affirms. He weighs 215 pounds and plays a hard fast game, and when mealtime comes the slashing left tackle plays a good game at the table.

According to news bureau sidelights on the Pennsylvanian, Steve is the fastest man on the team, an exceptional diagnostician of the opposing eleven's strategy, and a rugged and aggressive defense and offense man.

Steve and Tony Cernugel came down from Steelton, Pa., three years ago, Coach Carl Snaveley's final season. Tony suffered a severe leg injury in 1936 and has just returned to action this year. Steve is in line for All-Southern honors this season. Steve, Tony and George Stirnweiss now form one of the happiest roommate triumvirates on the campus.

"I don't have much time for anything except football," Steve says. He does have time, though, to be at least an average scholar in physical education. He hopes to start coaching somewhere next year.

Steve's literary and artistic tastes are on a pretty high standard. His favorite actor and actress are Clark Gable and Simone Simon, and his favorite author is Alexandre Dumas.

He is somewhat of an artist himself, an expert at selecting football winners. He frequently ventures predictions on a number of games throughout the nation and has a nice batting average.

Nearly one-third of Bavaria is forested.
