A DAY OF BATTLE... was yesterday. Any and all could expect, and be rewarded with, a snowball to the kisser and other parts of the anatomy. The sporting scene shifted from Woolley's training center to the campus at large, and from dawn to dusk hard-packed missiles whistled through the air.

Probably the day's most vigorous saga of snow transpired at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, when some 200 playful lads engaged in a terrific battle, lasting a furious 45 minutes.

It all started when a lower quadrangle gentleman (well, maybe) chanced upon a representative of the upper quadrangle. The l.g. man futively packed a snowball and heaved it accurately at the u.g. fellow, who forgot to duck.

"Everybody in the lower quadrangle is a  ," shouted the victim over his shoulder, as he ran to get help.

"Everybody in the upper quadrangle is also a  ," returned the original thrower of snow, using the quaint colloquialism known to all coeds who have to walk by the dorms to get to the gym.

Just like that. Loyal men from the two sections poured forth and began firing at each other. Compressed snow smashed into a hundred faces, and the battle was on.

Way over at K dormitory, the oasis located on the barren wastes of West Durham, a number of boys were itching to get in the fight. A council of war was held. One fellow was sent forth as bait.

"Hey," he screamed at the mob which was churning the snow between Mangum and Lewis, "Everybody in the upper and lower quadrangles is a *** **."

Which did the trick neatly. Upper and lower men, Yankees and Rebels, joined in a mass attack on K. The Finns and Russians couldn't have staged a better war. Scarcely 25 residents of the surrounded dorm, with their backs to the wall, repulsed attack after attack.

Cold hands, rather than cold feet, took the fight out of most of the boys. One fellow was laid away with a bloody nose. At least a dozen eyes turned red, purple, and finally black as a result of someones' excellent aim. It was rumored that a number of the belligerents were enclosing bricks in the snow they threw, and this was vouchsafed for by all who got bopped in the face.

At a late hour last night, K was preparing a message to be sent H dormitory, challenging the lower quadrangle group to a battle, fair and square, on the tennis courts.

The note read in part: "We, the residents of K, consider certain acts by H dormitory this afternoon as unfriendly. Therefore, we challenge all H men to a battle on the tennis courts. Bricks, clubs, and brass knuckles will be checked at the gate with an attendant."

THIS AND THAT... if State is

White Phantoms Meet Navy Saturday

SWIMMERS HOLD FINAL WORKOUT -- LEAVE TOMORROW

Having taken their last time trials before they leave tomorrow for two stiff meets over the week-end with Virginia and William and Mary in their opponents' home pools, Carolina's varsity swimmers appear to be in fine shape.

The Dolphins will take their last workouts today, leave by bus tomorrow morning at 9 and meet the Cavaliers Saturday. William and Mary will be met Monday at Williamsburg.

If they can maintain their present conditions by keeping out of the snow, the Tar Heels will be at top form when they go against Virginia. On the basis of trials yesterday, there will be changes in the line-up, but the squad is in good shape. The Dolphins hope the Cavaliers won't be on the rebound after losing by a shut-out score to Navy last week-end.

Otho Ross displaced Murray Drucker as the leading breaststroker yesterday by besting the latter's time in trials. Ben Lee was third and Noel Woodhouse fourth.

Jim Barclay and Billy Stone led the distance men, followed by Tom McQuade and Bill Thompson.

The backstroke lead was taken by Louis Scheinman, with George Meyer close behind. Lamar Gudger and Herb Langsam trailed them.

Fleming Stone continued at the head of the sprint men, being followed by Buzz Mitchell, Bill Peters, Whit Lees and W. Hawley Funke.

Weather, Sick List Hit Fencers Hard; Pictures Today

Between the weather, the infirmary list and sundried other undesirable factors now plaguing these areas, the fencing team is just about crippled—temporarily. Except for pictures this afternoon, things have been and will be quiet along the front.

The freshman team, in its opener Monday, took over Augusta Military

Pictures of the varsity and freshman fencing teams will be taken this afternoon at 5:30 in the Tin Can. All members of both squads are required to be present—and on time.

Academy 5-4; and if not for that, casual visitors to the East side of the Tin Can would have thought the fencing team had packed up and gone home.

IT'S COLD
Practice all week has been scarce—it is cold in the Tin Can, and the sick list has enticed many to its folds. Dick Freudenheim, senior epeeist, is still recuperating from his neck injury suffered Saturday in the Virginia meet and will be out until next week; Stan Whyte has a charley horse; Lorne Payne is attempting to hold down a trick shoulder—the team itself is in bad shape.

But things aren't so very black; for unless word is surprisingly received from a team or two recently contemplated for a meet here Saturday, the Tar Heels will be able to coast by this weekend with all rest and no work, which will be an answer to everyone's prayers.

GOOD START
With two wins in as many starts to their credit, the swordsmen have made a good start. Winston-Salem was walloped 18½-8½ two weeks ago in the curtain raiser and last week's Red Sanders, left, and Co-Cap'n Billy Winstead are suffering with colds as Carolina's boxers prepare to meet Virginia at Charlottesville Saturday in the biggest meet of the year. Both are expected to be ready by fight time, but neither worked out yesterday.

Gennett Returns But It's Doubtful He'll See Action

Tuesday's snow brought with it a transportation problem to boxing coach Mike Ronman, who is now hinting around to the athletic association that a train, and not a bus, should be used to take his fighters to Charlottesville Saturday.

Whether train or bus, freshman and varsity boxers will leave sometime tomorrow afternoon. They meet Virginia the following night in an effort to break the long, dry spell of Carolina defeats at the hands of the Cavaliers.

Ronman said sadly that his squad would not be at full strength. Though Andy Gennett came for a light workout after being in the infirmary over a week, Billy Winstead and Red Sanders stayed away with bad colds. Al Rose, suffering a slight ear injury, will not fight. "He's got a little ear trouble," Ronman commented, "and I don't think it's worth the chance to use him Saturday."

In a happier frame of mind, the coach marveled over the progress 175-pound Mike Bobbitt is making. Kimball continues in top shape, while

McFadden Wants Lowdown; Rolfe Writes Him A Letter

Banks McFadden
Clemson College
Clemson, S. C.

Dear Banks:

You do not comprehend the half of it, to put the situation in formal language of three syllables, more or less.

Last Saturday night at the Duke gym after the Blue Devils had slapped one on Clemson's whiskers, you sprawled all over the visitors' playing bench and told a couple of photographers, bystanders, Clemson old grads and stray autograph seekers that basketball was fine business, just like football, only indoors.

Just about this time a tall, dark individual wearing glasses came over and shook hands with you, passed the time of day and made all kinds of gestures in the general neighborhood of the basket. Suddenly an idea hit you. "When do you play North Carolina?" you asked him.

Well, this baffled the fellow as it naturally should. He goes to North Carolina and he couldn't very well be playing against the White Phantoms without having every badge wearer in the Southern conference reach for the telegraph blank, the smelling salts and the rules. But he figured a joke was a joke, and who was he not to help carry one along? So he said Tuesday.

"Good, I want you to write me a letter and tell me how we can stop this big center. Watch him, he's plenty good."

Now this bewildered him even more than usual and reeling about, he began wondering if he was six other guys named Joe. You see Banks, the gentleman would have been glad to send you the letter, only he is the tall center from Carolina; name is George Glammack.

George was pretty much put out when you failed to recognize him. He didn't know whether you were: (1) Joking, (2) serious and what have you. It may have been that George was wearing glasses, a brown overcoat and a red-plaid polka dot scarf and you didn't know the guy, never having seen him attired in anything but short

WRESTLERS TAKE LEAVE OF ABSENCE

If some interested bystander had wandered into the Carolina wrestling room yesterday afternoon with the great expectations of finding a Tar Heel grappling contingent taking a workout, he would have been greatly disappointed; for that matter he would have wondered if Carolina did have a wrestling team. Nobody, not even Coach Chuck Quinlan, seems to have an idea as to why only twenty men have reported for practice in the last two days when last week the squad consisted of some 60 odd matmen.

With the all important Southern Conference meet with VMI coming up in ten days, Quinlan is contemplating getting a pack of bloodhounds to trace down his freshman and varsity wrestlers. If this doesn't work, he threatens to use a dozen St. Bernards to rescue the absent Tar Heel matmen from Chapel Hill's numerous snow drifts.

MANY MISSING
Of course, such varsity and freshman grapplers as Don Torrey, Hobie McKeever, Roge Weil, Johnny Staples, and Pick Hamlin were present at yesterday's session, but even then the Quinlan hide-out looked more like a haunted house than a wrestling room. Quinlan swears that if those members of the freshman and varsity squads who have been absent for the last three days do not show up mighty soon, they would have to forfeit their right to wrestle in the trial fights for the VMI meet. These fights come up tomorrow and the beginning of next week.

Steady conditioning work was the order of the day for the twenty Quinlanmen who saw action yesterday. Don Torrey, unlimited, is particularly in condition again, having rested a sore shoulder for the past week. He should be ready to go against the cadets. Weil, who was suffering from a tooth infection, is also seeing action again.

Frosh Cagers Continue Heavy Drills; Lack Of Reserve Strength Is Worry

Convinced that the freshman basketball squad is weak on defense after seeing State score 51 points against it Tuesday night, Coach Doc Siewert said yesterday that he would consume the remainder of the week in brushing up on the Tar Babies' defense.

Siewert admitted that the team was on the up and coming, but that it still has a long way to go before it can win its share of ball games.

The biggest worry Siewert has now is to find five good substitutes. "I only have five good men, and I can't expect them to play every minute of the game," Siewert said. Fred Moore and Reid Suggs, who didn't start against State, after starting every other game, returned to the first string lineup in practice yesterday.

Wade Snell, who has played a lot of forward in the past two games, and George McCachren, who has seen much action at a guard post, were shifted to the second team. These two men form the nucleus of a second team which has Guy Byerly at center and Bob Miller at the other guard. Several men have been performing at the other forward, but Sylvan Stein has been playing there most.

NOT SATISFIED
Siewert isn't completely satisfied with that combination and is shifting men every day attempting to locate a better one.

The frosh engage Wingate Junior college here Saturday night in the only sports event scheduled here during the weekend. Wingate stops over in Raleigh tomorrow night to play the State frosh and comes over here Saturday morning. The game will start at
