LIGHT On The Hill

BY BILL SNIDER

The Sparkle of the Week
Chapel Hill contemporaries of New University Controller Billy Carmichael remember him best as the flashy little varsity basketball star who was captain of the White Phantoms in his junior year and whose fast-moving accurate style of play out timed many an unwary opponent. And they remember most of all his brilliant performance in the Southern Conference championship tournament down in Atlanta in the early twenties when Carolina opposed Alabama in the game for the crown. All this happened in the days before the Southeastern Conference when the whole South fought it out together.

Fans remember that game too for the rough the tumble exhibition put on by the Alabama team—a crew of big husky fellows none of whom seemed to know basketball had any rules about fouling. In the closing minutes of the game after several Alabama men had been thrown out on fouls, the team found itself faced with the prospect of playing only four men against Carolina's five. The referee was about to call that vital fifth man off the floor when Carolina asked that he be allowed to remain. Instead of showing his gratitude, the big fellow roughened it up all the more, confident that he wouldn't be thrown out in spite of anything he did.

Along with his teammates young Carmichael had been pushed around until he naturally became a bit peevish. Wisely he held back until the very last second. Just before the closing gun sounded, the big fellow went lumbering across the floor. Very neatly Carmichael extended his foot just in front of the other's toe. Spectators say the bully went riding down the floor on his face with the crowd's roar of approval sailing behind.

P.S. Carolina won the game.

Dept. of Enlightenment
In Washington last week rounding up a flock of prospective speakers, "Senator" Harry Gattson and his CPU associates, Bill Joslin and Norman Stockton, had an unexpected interview with silent sincere senior Senator Vandenberg, the Republican from Michigan. They were puttering around the impressive senate office building when they accidentally ran into the senator walking very busily along a corridor. Never one to let an unexpected opportunity slip by, Gattson approached the senator, introduced himself, and proceeded to rattle off the familiar CPU pressure spiel. "Senator," he said, "We'd like to have you down in Chapel Hill for a speech in the spring when your campaign gets rolling."

The senator turned majestically, "I'll have no campaign!" he said. And with that he turned quickly, stepped into an elevator, and was whisked away out of sight. Oh well, it didn't hurt to try, did it?

The Flicker of the Week
"Of Mice and Men" leads the field by far among the new film entries at the Smith palaces this week. Adapted closely and intelligently from the first successful Steinbeck novel, the production loses none of its original power in the transference to the screen. Quite wisely producer Hal Roach, whose greatest efforts hitherto have been the "Topper" and "Our Gang" comedies, chose no Hollywood stars to glamorize his film, rather selected his cast for its ability to portray the Steinbeck characters. Notice the novel manner of introducing credit flashes at the opening and the skillful evasion of the censors in the murder of Curley's wife. "Of Mice and Men" reaches the screen at an opportune moment, just in time to avoid standing in the shadow of Zanuck's magnificent version of "The Grapes Of Wrath" which is the current rave of New York film critics.

Spotlight On The News
Controller Carmichael was in the village last weekend for a short almost secret visit. He will take over his University job in June remaining as a special partner in his New York brokerage firm. . . . "Proff" Koch is considering copyrighting the name, "Playmakers." . . . The Jackie Coogan starred, "What A Life" which played to a mere handful here several weeks ago, folded last week in New Orleans, its backers having lost $50,000 on their roadshow tours of three Broadway hit shows. The movie competition was too stiff.

Every state and 47 foreign countries are represented in the Harvard university student body.

The American Youth Congress will meet in the nation's capital from February 9 to 12.

Under No Censor

By DON BISHOP

The coming week-end is a big one for dancers. Four fraternities will hold the annual Neophyte Ball; two or three other fraternities, and the law and medical schools will be dancing. Each dance - sponsoring group is given some "Suggestions for Entertaining Dance Chaperones." These suggestions are intended primarily for the persons immediately in charge of the dance, but it isn't out of order to let the remainder of the campus in on them. We give them to you for what they're worth:

"Chaperones at dances do not like to be 'wallflowers.' They are people, interested in young people and in their social activities, who have consented to attend a dance and perform a custom prescribed by social usage. Every effort should be made to make them a part of the spirit of the dance. With this in mind, the Order of the Grail has drawn up the following suggestions:

- "1. The persons arranging the dance should ask if the chaperones have transportation to and from the dance; if not, it should be provided.
- "2. Some person should meet them at the door and arrange to check their wraps without charge. After the dance their wraps should be brought to them.
- "3. Comfortable seats, with a good view of the orchestra and dance floor, should be provided.
- "4. The dance arrangers and other members of the organization presenting the dance should take a few minutes to speak to the chaperones. This will encourage others to do likewise.
- "5. During figures, grand marches, etc., space should be cleared in order that the chaperones may have a good view.
- "6. At intermission cold drinks or other refreshments should be brought to them.

"A seventh suggestion may not be practicable if the organization does not have sufficient funds, but a box of candy, or some such gift, to each chaperone, is a very worthwhile courtesy."

New Constitution

can be recalled by their electorate to whom they will be responsible, if a vote of this organization warrants this recall.

The legislature will have the power to review and pass the budgets of all campus-wide fee-collecting organizations and shall regulate the procedure to be followed by classes in passing their budgets. It shall also set up and pass the student government budget. It shall regulate campus election procedure and shall set the dates for all elections except those of the freshman class. The Student council will still control elections, but this will be according to the rules set up by the legislature.

All members of the legislature will be required to be familiar with fundamental rules of parliamentary procedure, and no student will be admitted to membership until he has been trained in this procedure.

Also to be presented to the legislature Monday night, will be a bill providing for a general campus vote to determine whether a representative from the graduate students will be allowed on the Student council.

Dance Leaders

MINORITY

Miss Igo And Phi

It seems the surge in student activities made by coeds last year is not just a temporary shifting of the sands—Carolina's women students are indulging in ever more active participation in campus affairs.

The newest example of this trend is seen in the selection by acclamation of Marian Igo to serve next quarter as speaker of the Phi assembly. Last year vivacious Mickey Warren became the first coed to be elected to a class office, and Louise Walker became the first woman president of the Di senate.

All this is as it should be, and the DAILY TAR HEEL welcomes the end of the days when the single function of coeds on the campus was to furnish an opportunity for expressive whistling.

And yet many women students complain that their opportunity for participation in campus affairs is still too limited. Rapidly increasing in numbers and ability, coeds in the future should hold more and more responsible positions.

There's plenty of room for students with ability—any time.

DI DRIVE

Manuscripts, $5,000

It was said that Tom Wolfe left a fortune of $10,000 when he died in 1938.

Ten thousand dollars, while a tidy sum, certainly doesn't compare with the legacies of the rich.

Yet Tom Wolfe, class of 1920, left more than a nice fortune. His "Look Homeward, Angel," his best novel, is one of the outstanding pieces of fiction of the past thirty years, and "Of Time and the River" and "Web and the Rock" have also gained critical praise. You can spend money, but his books will live.

The foregoing leads up to a consideration of the current drive being conducted by the Di senate, to which Wolfe belonged.

The holder of the Wolfe manuscripts has promised to give the University of North Carolina first option and the price is set at $5,000.

Paul Green, a Pulitzer prize winner, and contemporary of Wolfe's, has headed the committee trying to raise the necessary funds, but his efforts throughout the state have produced only a small amount.

The Di will canvass each student and, as in most drives, will accept any donation, no matter how small, for each ten cents adds to the total.

Tom Wolfe was a great student here.

His grades were A-1, and he served first as managing editor, then editor of the then weekly TAR HEEL.

It is fitting that the original manuscripts of alumnus Tom Wolfe should be the property of the University of North Carolina. And the drive for funds must get its start and gain momentum here. For only then, when the University has proved its interest in obtaining these manuscripts, will others be interested in contributing.

Congratulations to the Di, and may their drive be successful!

Can you spare a dollar, buddy?
