outlined, and among the careers to be to do plenty of hard work to get into dealt with this quarter are journalism, condition. law, vocations for women, and medicine. The programs are to be held weekly and will be supplemented by moving pictures and exhibitions in the library. The library exhibitions have already been set-up through the genius of Carl Pugh, ex-editor of the Buccaneer, and can be viewed by all book-worms and studious fellows who venture to the library.

The series is open to the public and, although no refreshments are served, it is rumored that the speakers will be genal and receptive to all queries by the future job-hunters.

Many professors complimented Herb Hardy and his interdormitory student faculty day committee for staging the "most successful dormitory participation in the history of the annual celebration."

DREAM MAN'S ROOM

A committee composed of Doris Goerch, Stacy Crockett, Ruth Ashburn, Judy Duke and Jo Martin visited the various boys' dormitories and served as judges to select the "Dream! Man's" room. After each had consumed 14 cups of punch, all of which happened to be red, they decided that K dormitory should be declared the winner. In making their report they stated that every room with the exception of one had one of Petty's famous drawings within its walls.

A circus, including sideshows, skits, auctions and music by Freddy Johnson's orchestra, drew large crowds to the Tin Can between 2 and 5 o'clock. Six fraternities and a like number of dormitories sponsored booths.

The remainder of the afternoon was taken up with visiting back and forth among fraternity and sorority houses whose members entertained in honor of faculty members and non-fraternity

And then came the highlight of the days activities when at 7:30 a sidesplitting jamboree got underway at Memorial Hall. Take-offs on various campus events, traditions, and personages were cleverly directed by Carroll McGaughey. A feature of the program was the coronation of the King and Queen. Professor E. J. Woodhouse of the Political Science department crowned in King who, in turn, crowned the Queen. The King, in full evening dress, and the Queen in a long flowing white gown, topped by a purple velvet robe, made a regal couple. They reigned over the remainder of the evening's entertainments. Attendants were Miss Alice Murdock and Miss Frances Dyckman, also dressed in royal gowns, and little Misses Janice and Betsy Green, daughters of Playwright Paul Green.

From 8:30 until 8:55 part of the show was broadcast. Carroll McGaugoriginal scores offered by Jack Page and Jim Byrd received praise. Everyone who took part were "most perfect."

And to bring a perfect day to an end Freddy Johnson's and Jimmy Farr's orchestras furnished music for the dance in the Tin Can.
