ASU Peace Speaker Attacks Roosevelt Administration

Small Crowd Hears Jackson Flay Dies For Bad Attitude

By Everett Lindsay Asserting that the Roosevelt administration has done much "to develop a definite war psychology in recent months," Gardner Jackson, left-wing representative of Labor's Non-Partisan league, deplored the limitation of civil liberties last night as he addressed a small gathering in Memorial hall.

Sponsored by the ASU, Gardner was introduced by Junius Scales, state ASU director. His topic was "Civil Rights and the Public Mind."

"The present state of public mind is dangerous-perilously close to the 1917 attitude," he declared, and admonished college youth to "exert every intelligent effort to avert war propaganda." Gardner expressed hostility toward attempts of administration associates to "break down resistance to war."

The calm, smooth-talking labor leader spoke informally while holding a lighted cigarette in his hand continuously. He extolled CIO bigwigs John L. Lewis and Sidney Hillman for their "honest determination to resist any possible entry into war." These men, according to Gardner, strive to preserve true democracy in a dictatorship-mad world.

At this juncture several students walked out of the auditorium. Speaker Attacks Martin Dies

"The Allies have been compelled," he said, "to withdraw their Andalsnes' landing base 100 miles southwest of Dorm Elections Trondheim and abandon hopes of storming the German stronghold from Near Completion the south."

In another startling statement he revealed that the British and French battle fleet, having badly wrecked Germany's small navy, has reached the eastern Mediterranean ready for action, if Italy should plunge into the war on the side of Germany.

He urged the members of the House of Commons, already grumbling against Chamberlain's conduct, to withhold their attacks until next Tuesday when there will be a "full dress" debate on the government war policy.

Contemporary Artist Describes Paris As Very Quiet Place

By Vivian Gillespie

"Paris looks like something out of a painting by Chirico, with the green sausage ballons nestling among the foliage in the public parks, and the city's statues bundled in sandbags" said Maurice Grosser, prominent contemporary artist, here yesterday.

"It is quiet and pleasant in Paris now; the food is good, the American colony has its little dinners, coutouriers continue to make their clothes. The war is never mentioned, and people are convinced that there will be no air raids."

Mr. Grosser, an Alabaman who majored in mathematics at Harvard, then went to Paris in 1925 and made a name for himself as an artist, returned to the United States in November to have a one-man show at the CPU must be filled out and handed the Julian Levy art gallery in New in by 6 this afternoon. If you have York.

> "Paris is in the middle of an excanse of territory, and it would take German planes from 20 to 30 minutes to reach it-time enough for the ballon barricade to go up and the antiaircraft planes to prepare. The Germans also know that if Paris is bombed, Berlin will be, too. There are a few street lights, equipped with shades that deflect the light down, so that the city is not completely dark," continued Mr. Grosser.

Quieter and More Fun

"Since the surrealist political-artistonight at 9:30 in Woollen gymnasium with Charlie Wood and his orchestra tic party is broken up, Paris is quieter and more fun," smiled Mr. Grosser.
