'Twice-Told' Tales

Coach Ray Wolf, at the present time a very happy man, is noted for his football coaching and yarn-spinning. He heads the Tar Heels during the Fall months and then spends much time the rest of the year making talks before UNC alumni groups all over the state and country.

These talks, chiefly concerning football, are punctuated frequently with humorous stories, both tall and true. One of the best known follows:

One of the brightest stars on one of North Carolina's big football teams had to take a history test to be eligible the next Saturday... The Prof. asked him one simple question, "what is the capital of North Carolina?"... "Pikeville," replied the guy... "Well," said the academic, "if you had answered correctly you would have had 100... Since Pikeville is only 15 miles from Raleigh, I will give you 85 and pass you."... (Two days later the fellow toted the mail, as usual).

When he had finished telling this "tall" one he usually grinned while the "old boys" chuckled and let it go as a good joke well told.

The joke, however, was destined to a future in the public eye, for Eddie Brietz, well-known Associated Press sports columnist, heard about it, thought it was true, and dubbed it "True Story" in his column last week.

Alumni must have enjoyed "re-chuckling" over the story for an alumnus away out in Marshalltown, Iowa, clipped the item from Brietz's column and sent it in to the DTH. Perhaps he thought that the player was a member of a former Tar Heel squad.

Ray Wolf can answer that one. And, who knows, maybe that 'twice-told tale' is true—but it didn't happen at UNC.

Brick Sidewalks

We were sitting and looking out of the window yesterday and thinking of some of the apparent, ever-present needs of the University. Just a split second apart we noticed two things: our shoes, resting on the desk top, were covered with dust; outside, a bicycle whizzed along on the gravel path and blew up a cloud of dust.

That settled it: an "apparent, ever-present need of the University"—brick sidewalks.

Warm, dry weather comes. Dust is blown all over the place. Classroom floors accumulate layers of it; dormitory rooms are visited by the mild dust storms; shoe-shine parlors get-rich-quick off Carolina students, faculty, etc.

Comes the rainy season. The paths are washed out and require an expensive outlay of cash for more gravel to fill the gullies. Mud cakes itself on the feet of passing students and eventually comes to rest on the floors of classroom and dormitory buildings, where, periodically, it becomes necessary to re-surface the floors.

Only in the very cold season do the paths become more pleasant; and even then they continue to have their sand-paper effect on shoes.

So, why not brick sidewalks?

Tar Heel Spirit

A rejuvenated Tar Heel team downed the Horned Frogs of Texas Christian last Saturday afternoon.

Coach Ray Wolf's charges who took the field against TCU seemed like a far different outfit from the Carolina team in the first three games.

We hear many reasons explaining the team's success: Lalanne's spark that was missing earlier this year; sound, hard blocking that was lacking in the earlier contests; and several others. We don't think that any technical reason can be named to account for the Tar Heels' victory on Saturday.

Good spirit, and the right mental approach, plus the knowledge that the student body was right in back of the team probably tell the story better than any other cause. The mental attitude with which one goes into something usually determines whether a man plays the game to his full capacity.

The spirit of the student body at Saturday's game was the best since the spontaneous rally after the Tulane game last year. Some credit is due Ferebee Taylor and his University club for whipping up the enthusiastic support of

Good Morning

By Orville Campbell

COACH RAY WOLF WAS A VERY HAPPY MAN SATURDAY NIGHT. His Carolina football team, much to the surprise of the closest football observer, had just defeated TCU by a convincing 21 to 14 score. It was a clear-cut victory, one that gave us every indication to believe that the Carolina football team was on the way to bigger and better things.

Still, it was more than that. We'll have to admit that after the Wake Forest game this year most of us lost our school spirit. True, we wanted our football team to win, but for some reason we didn't pull quite so hard for those 11 men who were representing us on the football field.

The TCU game changed all that. Before it was 10 minutes old Carolina students found what they had lost two weeks before. They found the old Carolina spirit, but definitely.

TCU has gone. We won't forget them soon. Someone remarked they threw more passes Saturday than the government has been spending money. We're not so sure about that. We're glad they came to Chapel Hill. They had a fine football team, one that any other team in the country should be proud to defeat.

Much credit for the return of the Carolina spirit should go to Coach Ray Wolf and his very able assistants. They worked hard to give the Carolina football team that little spark they needed to make them a winner.

They spent hours trying to find out what was wrong. They knew they had men on the field who believed in high ideals of good sportsmanship, who wanted Carolina to win, who wanted this team to stand out over previous Carolina teams.

If you recall, sports writers over the state commented after the Wake Forest and Davidson games that there was something definitely the hitherto comparatively lethargic campus. Some can be laid to the playing of the team. They are all intermingled.

At any rate, students, keep up the backing, and we venture to say that the team will be in there hitting harder — with that twelfth man giving his all.—L. H.

wrong with the Carolina team this year. They said this team did not have the spirit and zip that other teams coached by Wolf had possessed.

Every one of those writers admitted they were wrong in their Sunday morning stories. They admitted they had seen Carolina play one of the best games in its history.

Checking over the Carolina schedule for the remainder of the year, you'll see that the Tar Heels have some tough games ahead. This Saturday it's N. C. State. Then there is Tulane, Fordham, Richmond, Duke and the University of Virginia.

Perhaps the team will drop another game or two, but it won't be so bad. They gave Carolina students something Saturday they won't soon forget. They gave Coach Wolf something too. Yes, they gave Coach Wolf, the pupil, a victory over Dutch Meyer, the teacher. That football team gave the Carolina student body back the spirit they lost. Our congrats to them.

and the chairmen of these areas into an administrative committee with the president of the student body as chairman.

The purpose in drawing up the plan was to set up machinery for more direct participation by the student body in decision-making through accurate expression of its collective, "considered opinion."

The organization will probably remain basically the same in the Ways and Means committee's final draft of the bill. The changes which the committee will be likely to make are to remove the four top chairmen, to make the 40 group chairmen the executive committee, and to more clearly define the limitations and functions of the organization.

Seeds of Progress

Yesterday this column learned that a new and different organization would hit the campus before the week is out. The club, which is entirely original and seems to have sprung from the heart of the campus, is to educate the students at the University to the pertinent problems facing North Carolina today.

The idea, if our informant is correct, is to look at national, international, and state developments strictly from a North Carolina point of view. Such vital questions as the farm program, schooling, labor, taxation, crime, politics, housing, and health—all of them vital to the nation—will be reviewed as they affect this state.

Although it is rumored that the new, unnamed organization will attempt to take action in whatever way and whenever it sees fit, the real value as we see it, is in the educational angle. If the group can get a majority of the students from North Carolina interested in how the cotton and tobacco situation can be improved, or what steps can be done to alleviate the difficult housing problem in the state, or what can be done about the rising tax rates, then they will have accomplished more than a 100 clubs and round-table bull sessions that I know of, all tossed into one melting stew.

The reason I think this idea is so much better than most I have heard is that IT IS DEALING WITH REAL PROBLEMS AND REAL PEOPLE. The trouble with most youth movements is that they go about to solve all the problems of the universe, only to discover after they have spent their last ounce of energy that they haven't done a thing except blow up a big wind.

The students of the University know the lay of the land in North Carolina. It is only fitting that they deal with problems that strike nearest home. Here we find the real value of this new group.

Although the details of how the new organization will work are not completely known to us at this time, we feel that since it is coming from the heart of the campus and will deal with practical problems in North Carolina that it is a worthwhile addition to our crowded campus.

The only way any democracy can function properly is for the people of the democracy to be intimately acquainted with the major issues facing them. With an organization such as this taking form on the campus, we cannot help but feel that the ground-work for a more firm and stable democracy in North Carolina is being laid here in Chapel Hill.

Letters To The Editor

To the Editor,

Dear Sir:

Here is an approving yell of congratulations to the Student Legislature as a result of its decision to renovate the humor magazine, name, character, contents, et al. To me the action appears to be a demonstration of good sense and sound judgment. Alumni from time to time in recent years have protested the association of the University's name with crude stabs at humor. It's not rationalizing the former situation at all to say that these same critics probably are aroused because their smoker-room stories are bared to public eyes. The important thing is that the University and Buccaneer "humor" was being associated too often to the harm of the institution's reputation.

Long life to present good intentions!

Faithfully yours,
J. Maryon Saunders,
Secretary,
Alumni Association.

Facilities Of Graham Memorial Open To All Student Groups

Social facilities of Graham Memorial, the student union building, are available to all student organizations at no cost. This fact, Director Richard Worley thinks, is not known throughout the student body.

This year more than ever Graham Memorial is equipped to entertain and relax the studious mind. A committee has been appointed to consider the future use of the lounge for organization dances, and a small room on the second floor is being fitted with easy chairs and a radio for the benefit of those who like a quiet evening of bridge and music occasionally. Cards and tables will be provided to go with the room and music.

Banquet halls, the lounge, or a student room can be secured by any student group through the union office in 110 Graham Memorial. The lounge boasts a rich supply of reading matter. This year's publications include The New York Times, New York World Telegram, Washington Post, Raleigh News and Observer, Durham Morning Herald, Durham Sun, Greensboro News, Asheville Citizen, Winston-Salem Journal, P. M., Baseball World, Football News, Harper's, Reader's Digest, New Yorker, Fortune, Time, Collier's, Life, Punch, American, News Week, Photoplay, Atlantic Monthly, Nation, New Republic, Saturday Evening Post, and Recreation.

Office assistants will play any of the collection of classical and semi-classical recordings upon request. From four to six new popular hits are added each week to the collection.

In the basement of Graham Memorial there is a Grill which serves three meals every day at reasonable
