Feminine Progress

The coeds proved the other afternoon that they, like most other American people, are essentially middle-of-the-road-

DAILY TAR HEEL columnist Martha Clampitt went into Monday afternoon's meeting hot over abolishing the secret nominating committee. Women's Council President Jane McMaster just as vigorously upheld the status quo of maintaining the secret group.

Out of the squabble came a hybrid that showed some form of progress. They passed a proposal that will make all nominations come directly from the floor, instead of being sprung upon an unsuspecting women's student body some dark night by a totally secret group.

Under the new set-up, every nomination will be made when the coed student body meets in general session. No one will know who the secret committee's candidates are. Any girl can put up another's name just as long as a second is in the offing.

This move frees the woman student who makes a nomination from the floor from being labeled with the stigma of being an independent, and trying to buck the committee. All the secret nominating committee will do now is to insure that "capable" girls are put up for office.

The progress made last Monday was of an evolutionary nature. It seems as though the call of the DAILY TAR HEEL for more democratic leadership and greater participation by more coeds in the running of their part of student government is being heeded.

Some day the coeds will be able to nominate their own, better leaders from the floor without a benevolent, motherly group looking over the field and ricking out their leaders for them. As the women students assume more responsibility, they will find this control from the top gradually diminishing.

We're straining at the leash to see that day come 'round real soon.-L. H.

Education Needs Money

The DAILY TAR HEEL wishes to throw in a word of support to the assertion of the North Carolina State College Technician and the Raleigh News and Observer that the Budget commission set its recommended appropriation for State college at a much lower figure than it should be. It is pointed out that the proposed amount for 1941-42 is $3,000 less than it is this year. Furthermore, though the budget estimate turned in by President Frank P. Graham and Dean Harrelson of State college had requested $200,000 additional for 1942-43, an increase of only $7,000 was recommended.

The Technician makes its plea for more money on the grounds that national defense needs trained men, and that State college must have sufficient funds if its students are to come out with the technical training that modern warfare demands.

This is a valid argument. At the same time, the DAILY TAR HEEL would plead the case of the Chapel Hill branch of the University. This institution is training 100 students in the Naval Reserve Officers Training corps; 40 students a quarter are learning to fly under the Civil Aeronautics authority; chemistry professors are doing research for the war department: the University's professors are constantly being called on to perform special services for the government and for national defense; on a shoe string budget the department of physical education established compulsory exercise for all male undergraduates. All of these steps are contributions to the national defense effort; they require funds.

But the plea for education in general is equally worthy. The world is giving itself a terrific beating now. When peace comes and men are sane again they must demonstrate a mental ability that never in history has been seen, if they propose to reconstruct a world on solid and permanent basis. Hope lies in education. Money spent now to make men think will pay huge dividends in a simple type, at any rate. For we have been in and out the flu

Tales That Nobody Told Me or I Was There

mazes at Graham

Memorial and the Infirmary, and feel somewhat like a kindred soul (probably will be one soon!) And let us assure you that all is not stark drama behind the lines. For instance, there's some of the things that happen down in Graham Memorial, which is a student union building in the true sense of the word at this point . . . the boys there are wonderful patients . . . in fact, we've become so attached to them that we hate to think the epidemic will be over soon. . . .

There's 'Ed Kantrowitz who has to be tucked in every night, and who keeps a complete record of the coed nurses who come and go . . . no admittance unless you check with him . . . then there's the boys, Clyde Stallings, Jack Lindsey and Richard Upchurch who had to be put in the lounge part of the G. M. Ladies Lounge and who were heckled by the sign somebody put on the door-"Maternity Ward" . . . but Clyde claims the worst part is the thought that he may have to die in a Ladies Lounge. . . .

The first day we worked we came whipping into the mass bedroom with a fellow male worker, and were immediately greeted by a patient about half-way across the room who said in a voice "Well, if it isn't Dr. and Mrs. Kildare" . . . a favorite nurse is "Smitty" . . . who came in one day and told the boys that there was a new crew of flu-ites coming, so to straighten up and be able to give the new boys a warm welcome . . . the boys did, for when the new recruits came they all raised themselves, however feebly, and let 'er go with a loud burst of applause . . . the drugs store orders are sometimes quite interesting also . . . the other day we had to go all over town (joke) looking for such things as Superman Famous Funnies, Whizz and Action Comic Book, Rexter of Mars, Judge, and other such literature . . . we had one intellectual who ordered Time, and one timely person who got Good Housekeeping. . . . Fred Schmidt is now working on a sampler - he's embroidering the letters at this point, which read "The house may be wee but the welcome is big" . . . requests for Dr. Worley vary from those who can't wait to hear "Tiger Rag" to those who wish to hear the Romeo and Juliet overture . . . once and a while there's a good poker game going . . . and people keep asking Betty Moore (nurse Edith Cavell to you) to play the ouiji board with them . . . to speak nothing of the boys who asked us to help just peace and world order after the war.

3,600 Guinea Pigs

Many's the time that a woebegotten senior or an idealistic sophomore has come back from making an "A" or a "B" on a course, and remarked, "That course and the professor were out-and-out awful. I wish something could be done about it."

Then, too, there are those fellows who don't do so well on a course because the professor was obscure or because the subject matter itself was prepared poorly or coordinated badly. These students have a legitimate claim. There are many others, however, who come to school, pay their tuition and then do all they can to get out of examinations, and work of all kinds. For the former, we have sympathy and a panacea, while for the latter we offer scallions and say, wake up!

For the students who have a legitimate claim for kick on courses and the way they are taught, a student advisory committee on curriculum should be set up. We students at present have no easy means of making our reactions to courses known to the faculty or administration.

Certainly the guinea pigs out there in front of the professors ought to have their side represented and hand We have a hunch that " day is coming very soon.-

Plenty Double-Trouble

BROOKINGS, S. D .- (ACP)-Pardon me, but you look just like Margie. With only a change of name, that phrase probably is being used more often on the State college campus this year than it is in the well-known comic Four girls, two brunettes and two blondes, identical twins, have been spreading confusion ever since they registered in home economics.

They are the Smiths, Nona and Zona, and the Ogilvys, Florence and Margaret.

Although the two pairs of sisters claim well co-ordinated tastes in most things, they have their troubles with hats-and boy friends. The Smith girls' trouble is identical taste-they usually both like the same fellow. Ogilvy arguments arise from the opposite source—they can't agree on

Margaret and Florence answer questions for each other when they find themselves in the same class, and Dean Stallings, chief of the library, where the Smith girls work in their spare time, admittedly never knows whether it is Zona or Nona who is on
