More Buildings Needed

When the budget commission of the State Legislature took a huge slice out of Dr. Frank Graham's original Greater University appropriations request, a few weeks ago, he did not relax his efforts to show the Legislature and the people the needs of the three institutions he represents.

Probably the chief need at Chapel Hill, State college, and Woman's college was the increase in appropriations for professors' salaries. For many years now, it has been generally recognized that the staff, particularly at Chapel Hill, has been grossly underpaid. Only sheer loyalty and the sentimental attachment that one gets for the University and the village has kept many of our professors from accepting better, more lucrative offers.

The joint committee on appropriations undoubtedly realized this fact, when they granted Dr. Graham and the University approximately the total requested in the revised budget. President Graham recommended a $589,185 increase yearly over what the budget commission had passed on, and he was granted a $540,000 increase, which is substantially a minor cut.

Probably the two greatest factors in bringing about the additional appropriation recommendation of the joint committee were the efforts of Governor J. Melville Broughton, and Dr. Graham, whose patient, sincere, and yet dynamic pleas have shown the Legislators the necessity for the funds.

Yet, there still remains another vital part of the budget which the budget commission lopped off entirely, and which the joint appropriations committee has not as yet dealt with. That is the permanent improvements fund that Dr. Graham has requested. He has asked for about a million dollars for a new wing to the library, a new Commerce building, a new drama building, and several other permanent improvements. With the increase in our student body enrollment in the past few years, we can observe the need for these buildings daily as we sit in crowded classrooms, and as we see books stacked on the floor between library shelves. If it is at all possible, we must have those permanent improvements in Chapel Hill.

The DAILY TAR HEEL hopes that the budget approved by the joint committee on appropriations will be passed by the General Assembly within the next few weeks. When we say that Dr. Graham has sliced the requests down to the bone, we mean that the bone is virtually bare already. Also, should the joint committee not pass on the permanent improvements program, we would strongly urge that a separate bill be introduced providing funds for the much-needed buildings.—L. H.

Behind the Team

Students will dust off their feathered quills today and put their John Hancocks to a scroll in the Book Exchange. As each name is inscribed, the student body will pay its tribute to the 1941 edition of the Carolina basketball team.

They say that the crowd will always string along with a winner. As the bandwagon rolls on, some cynics say, its structure gets filled with all sorts of hangers-on.

We've always been skeptical of this analysis, because an important factor has been left out: the active supporters who are up in the stands to spur on a team that might be slipping ever so slightly, a ball club that might have become just the least bit lethargic. The full meaning of roaring spectators, beating out a steady staccato, "Our Team Is Red-Hot," cannot be measured in real terms. What it does in the hearts of the players out there on the court passing the ball around, shooting, and fighting for the ball in the scuffle under the basket is indeterminable — except that it counts an awful lot.

The student body wants the players on the team to know

Rockbottom

Milton Abernathy did not go to Washington to testify before the Dies committee.

He was in Washington on private business. Tongues started wagging throughout the gossip grapevine when employees of his "Intimate Bookshop" were kidding someone who came in and asked for "Ab."

Long the subject of malicious rumors, Abernathy was immediately suspected of the worse. The simple moron that took the joke seriously, even thought it was pretty sorry humor, spread the thing.

The wags saw their joke met with appreciative reception and kept it up all day long. Time the sun set the entire Hill was sucked in. Thus is injustice done. This is an innocent person accused of anything people would please to find him guilty.

Aggie's isn't Aggie's anymore but the Bloody Bucket is. Aggie is no longer at his honored stand on Old Fraternity Row, but out on the Pittsboro road where the beer boys can carry on business as usual during altercations.

However, as the lad with the

that it will be behind them in the tournament, win, lose, or draw. The same top rate school spirit that carried an underdog, grim, fighting football team to victory over Duke in the fall, and swept onward with victory after victory in basketball this winter as Glamack and Company went through the most successful season in many years, will be with the White Phantoms as they head into the Southern conference tournament.

The signing of names on a piece of paper by itself means little; it really is just another way that the students can express their whole-hearted support and appreciation of their basketball team.

Whether the team wins or loses in the conference play, they will give a demonstration of fight and determination, backed up by their ability as ball-players and in view of the fact that 3,500 strong are urging them to win.—L. H.

Quotable Quotes

(By Associated Collegiate Press)
"The basic policy originally laid down for the civil pilot training program contemplated that it should be justified on educational and economic grounds alone, apart from the great significance which it held in connection with national defense. Any of the young people who have gone through the course can attest to the educational values of it. Economically, it directly benefits the manufacturer of small planes, the struggling instructors, and redounds to the benefit of air trans-

Dorm, Frat Heads Inactive In Anti-Gambling Drive

By Jim McEwen
In a recent article in the DAILY TAR HEEL, Dave Morrison, president of the student body, said in regard to gambling at the University, "It is the duty of the dormitory managers, the Inter-dormitory council, the fraternity house managers, and the Inter-fraternity council to see that the law is enforced."

However, as yet none of these groups has done anything about the matter. Each of the organizations is rather indefinite as to what its duties are, with the result that everybody is attributing the job of law enforcement to everybody else.

Ben Heath, president of the Inter-dormitory council, stated that it is up to the Student council to take care of any offenders. About the only thing the Interdormitory council can do, he said, is to try to ferret out some of the gamblers. In his opinion gambling for small stakes should not be frowned upon too greatly, and as for the boys who play for higher stakes, it is very difficult to ever catch them. About the only way is to slip up on them and catch them in the act of paying off; if actual money is not seen, the party can swear the game is for nominal stakes only.

Joe Welborn, head of the dormitory managers, said that there is nothing the managers can do about the situation except make a lot of noise in talking the thing down; they have no authority, he stated. According to him, it is up to the Interdormitory council to take action.

The head of the fraternity house managers, Gene Williams, admits that he doesn't know what to do. At a meeting Monday he and the other frat managers will try to find some solution, but he doesn't have any idea as to what that solution will be.

Churches
