Today's Vital Issue

"Gates Kimball, would you mind keeping off the grass down there?" the cry went up yesterday morning, and campus veterans knew that another "Keep Off the Grass" campaign had begun. Each Spring, now, for the past two years, Fred Weaver has turned horticulturist of a sort—perhaps he reads Better Homes and Gardens—and the University sponsors a drive to keep our grass green, and untrod upon. Each Spring, the campaign is effective. So, if you don't want your name bellowed out over the loud-speaker at Chapel period, and if you want to see our campus adorned with flowing green grass, please "Keep Off the Grass."—L. H.

Future Freshmen

"Timber," one might call the young high school students who will come to our campus this Thursday and Friday for the twenty-ninth annual North Carolina High School Week. Annually, Roy Armstrong and his Pre-College Guidance division of the University have sponsored a day for boys and girls from secondary schools to come up to Chapel Hill, look us over, learn what they will about our campus, and generally have a rollicking field day. And a hectic day it will be for over 1,000 young students who will travel from every part of the old North State to see their University, Carolina. This year, several new features have been added to the program. Debates, tennis tournaments, a track meet, and many other interesting and educational activities will be in store for the visitors. North Carolina High School Week is beneficial from whatever angle you look at it. From the standpoint of the students, it gives them an opportunity not only to enjoy themselves, but also to look over our campus and possibly decide on coming here next year. From the other side, we find that it benefits the University to show high school students what we have here. With rising standards of education in other colleges throughout the state, the competitive drive for influencing the top students to matriculate here is heightened. We can think of no better way to sell a University to students than to show them a good time, while pointing out to them the advantages of the University.—L. H.

Coeds Come to Life

In Sunday's paper, we noticed an item about the Town Girls taking over Fish Worley's Community sing. The actual conducting of the sing doesn't mean an awful lot, but what does matter, and is a sure sign of progress is that the Town Girls are a thriving, growing organization. For many years, the town students have been among the most disorganized, dispirited members of our student body. This can be explained by the nature of the transient population in the boarding houses, marking a continual exodus from private rooms to dormitories or fraternities. Yet, a goodly portion of our student body stays out in town. According to Pat Winston, over 800 students lived there during the fall quarter. The Town Boys' group has been active during the past two years, and, although their growth has been gradual, it has been sure and will in the next few years take its place along with the Inter-Dormitory and Inter-Fraternity councils. The Town Girls, however, is a new organization which was revitalized this fall. Its purpose is to organize and to solidify all coeds living out in town. Thus far, it has carried on numerous programs, including a dance and last Sunday's community sing. Such steps for further consolidation among a student body that might have out-

Lend An Ear

NOT PLAY-MONEY BUT—
"It's not kid money you're playing with when you talk in sums of $40,000," one graduate student commented the other night about the Legislature taking over the blocked total of fees and allotting them to individual organizations at their own discretion. We could say bunk, that fellow just didn't know what he was talking about. The trouble with him is that he just hasn't been here long enough. But, what he had to say is a point that we have to consider.

What the Legislature did last night in handing over all distribution of fees to the Student Legislature is probably the biggest single step in student self-government in recent years. Hitherto, the students have had control over their conduct, and the student's own honor court could suspend a fellow member from school. The students could make all sorts of regulations over their own lives and the way they live—all of which is a big lot. But, never before in the history of our school, have we had control over the way we collectively spend our money.

The main brunt of the criticism is directed toward the students themselves in this case, simply on the basis that college students are not yet mature enough to handle their own finances.

To this, we directly answer: this is the same criticism that has met every single progressive advance on this campus or in any other part of the world. Whenever college students, or any other men or women strive to take more responsibility upon their shoulders, they are always met with the cry that they are biting off more than they can chew.

The only way that we can possibly hope to have a system here that allows any amount of student freedom is to pave the road with more opportunity for freedom.

Students must be given the opportunity to manage their own finances now for two very good reasons:

1. They have demanded this right.
 2. They appear to be willing to accept the responsibility.
- The least we can do is to take a crack at it and see where we come out at the end of the year. You never know, we have surprised a lot of folks in the past.

Specific penalties for violations of the bill are not provided in the bill. All judicial action will be left up to the Student Council, one of whose possible penalties would be disqualification of a candidate from office.

Any infractions of the bill are punishable under the campus code.

and appeared with them at the Capitol and Roxy theaters in New York. She was cast in three successive motion pictures: "Here's to Romance," starring Nino Martini; "Hooray For Love," with Gene Raymond, and "Santa Barbara Fiesta," with Gary Cooper. She danced at the opening of Radio City. She traveled over Europe with her own ballet, presenting at one time, the first command performance ever given by a dancer before the Italian royal family.

Miss Gambarelli's most precious possession, in her mind, is a pair of ballet slippers given to her by Pavlova shortly before the death of that great dancer. At the age of 12 Gambarelli had an audition before Pavlova, who, enthusiastic over the child's talent, took "Gamby" under her wing and devoted hours to coaching the young dancer. On the slippers Pavlova inscribed in her own hand, "To my logical successor — Anna Pavlova."

Apropos of Nothing

By Barnaby Conrad

Weak weekend, wasn't it? Skipper Bowles, ex-rising campus maestro, sent in this letter to the cluster that infests Rusty's shop. And I quote:

"DO NOT BREAK THE CHAIN! This chain was started in Reno by an unidentified werewolf in the hope of bringing happiness to all business men. Unlike most chains, this one doesn't cost money.

"Simply send a copy of this letter to 5 (five) male friends. Then bundle up your wife, or a reasonable facsimile thereof, and send her to the fellow whose name, like Abou Ben Adhem's, heads the list.

"When your name works up to the top you will in return receive 15,176 gorgeous girls.

"Have faith! DO NOT BREAK THE CHAIN! One man broke the chain and he got his wife back."

Everyone is aware of the all-important fact that a kiss is simply the anatomical juxtaposition of two orbicular muscles in a state of contraction, but here's a new definition I hold:

"A kiss is a noun, but it is generally used as a conjunction. It is rarely declined and is more common than proper. It is not very singular in that it is usually used in the plural. It agrees with me." Awright . . . so it's old!

Ad Infinites
The answer to the question "Why do radio announcers have small hands?" is "Wee paws for station identification."

Jo Andoe quotes Andrze, the Polish Lothario, who would marry Simons Roof to Martha Clappitt and retire them with a sturdy copy of More's "Utopia" . . .

The guy who ran a lawn mower over his canary to get shredded tweet . . . Did it ever occur to anyone else that Basil Rathbone looks like two profiles looking for a face?

Eyetems
Those flower pots outside the second floor of Old East . . . Bishop stepping over a Please sign on his way to a Keep Off the Grass meeting . . .

Why that sign in South advertising Virginia's summer school? Isn't La Buckette as good as their Cavalier?

And thus ends my unflagging search for vital issues which govern the courses of your life and mine, or in the words of Barbara Fritchie (a gummy soul if there ever was one), who said to me once, in a jocular vein, "Search if you must with dauntless hope, But spare us all that drip you dope."
