

'It's All in the Profile' Says Caricaturist Zumpano

Says People Look Worse That Way

By Shirley Hobbs

It all began when August Zumpano's teachers used to catch him drawing birds on the walls at school. Now he is drawing $3.15 an hour for showing college students how funny-looking they are. His current victims are at the University.

After Zumpano was graduated from the free New York Cooper Union Art school, he decided that doing caricatures would be a "good racket." At the art school he did portraits.

Zumpano chose college students for his victims because "they have a better sense of humor and more money." He found his work so much more pleasant than being really artistic in an attic that he has been campus-trotting all over the United States for the last six years. He charges $1.05 for each drawing which he does with chalk in pastels. He spends 20 minutes on each one.

Robertson Entree

Usually Zumpano stations himself in the lobby of a dormitory, fraternity or sorority house and works as long as he has customers. "Miss Robertson at Dormitory One was swell to me," he says. "The house presidents at the other dormitories in that court would not let me in."

"It's all in the profile," he says. "After that I'm on my own and don't need the subject to pose. I always do profiles because people look worse that way. I try to hide their best points and bring out their worst. People don't get sore because they don't ask for a caricature unless they know what it is all about."

Touchy Victims

Occasionally Zumpano finds a "touchy" victim. A boy in Colorado tore up his caricature in Zumpano's face. The caricaturist says he finds men much more sensitive than women. "They don't get sore as a rule because they have asked for it, but I can tell their vanity is hurt," he says.

Zumpano plans to make VMI students his next victims. "I'll be doing this all my life," he says. "If any woman wants to marry me, she'll have to travel with me."

store of points that the Devils will be counting on in the field. Richardson, in particular, certainly has the ability, and exhibited top notch form in taking the conference javelin crown away from Duke's Lewis last spring. If the Carolina grid star could break through, it might mean the meet and an undefeated Tar Heel record.

The freshman of the two competing schools will open their respective dual meet seasons this afternoon with the javelin throw getting under way at 1:15. The frosh track events will be run off immediately following each varsity event of a similar nature—the first being the mile run which will be held at 2:55 sharp.

being able to get a higher education, and should take their experience back to their communities," said Miss Hartwig. "They should promote good standards in sponsoring play days and sports for secondary schools, and give to those who can't go to college the benefits that they received."

Eleven Colleges
Carolina coeds are hostesses to women from 11 state colleges, WCUNC, Duke, High Point, Meredith, Peace Junior College, St. Mary's, Guilford, Catawba, Salem Academy, ECTC, and Greensboro, during the three-day conference. Co-chairmen of the conference are Marjorie Johnston, president of the Woman's Athletic association, and Mrs. J. G. Beard, director of women's sports.

Discussed at a group meeting yesterday morning was the question of whether the federation should hold a national conference once every three years and district conferences the intervening years, or whether the group should meet nationally one year, in districts the next, and in states the third year.

Student leaders at the meeting favored the state conference every third year, as they felt that each school would receive more personal attention by that plan. This question of policy will be decided at the national conference to be held at Wellesley next year.

Fencing Exhibition
University coeds Adele Austin and Mary McCormick presented a fencing exhibition after Miss Hartwig's talk. Three movies dealing with women's athletics were shown.

Swimming in perfect symmetry, WCUNC mermaids gave a polished water pageant in Bowman Gray Memorial pool last night for the delegates and the public. Men diving stars from the University put on a demonstration during the aquacade.

Relaxing after the strenuous activities of the day, coed delegates had a play night in conjunction with the members of the Monogram club. A folk and square dance exhibition, directed by Fish Worley, was presented for the visitors during the play night.

Final Groups Today
Final discussion groups will meet at 9:30 this morning. Co-recreational conduct will be discussed under the out over TEP. Bill Swink, the winners' ace hurler, gave up five hits but kept them well scattered.

Scoring twice in the first, the winners were never headed. In each of the fifth and sixth frames they tallied three runs. Tex Cooper and Buddy Willis with two singles apiece were the top batters of the game for Chi Phi.

Law School No. 1 had one big inning in which they tallied six runs to defeat Graham 6 to 2. In the third inning the lawyers sent six runs across the plate on singles by Cheshire, Foneville, and Stone, doubles by Cobb, Gaylord, and a three bagger by Gilliam. Manly hit a home run for Graham in the fifth. Sewell, Gaylord, Stone, and McGeachy with two bingles each topped the Law School hitting. For Graham Welborn and Hardwick were best.

BVP scored its second victory of the campaign with a 7-to-2 win over ROTC. Paul Bernet had the situation well under control as he pitched five-hit ball for BVP. The winners reached Hodges of ROTC for only seven hits but he received poor support from his teammates.

Witkins and Winchester with a pair of bingles were tops for the winner. For the losers Hodges with a homer was best.

a navy could prevent the landing of hostile forces and avoid the necessity of a huge army.

Quotes Authorities

He quoted authorities as saying that a minimum of three years training is required for an adequately prepared soldier today, and maintained it "evident that one year of training would teach only inadequate fundamentals."

William Abeyounis, second speaker for the affirmative, said that selective training would permit the citizen to go into the field for which he is best suited. The Finns, the Swedes, and the Swiss, he said, have had compulsory military training such as is advocated and have developed a more efficient army as well as a healthier and hardier stock of men.

Walter Cannon, second speaker for the negative, showed that there was a parallel between compulsory training and the idea that the individual should serve the state as it is enforced in the totalitarian countries. This, it was pointed out, would be a definite danger to the democratic system.

The fact that the poor man would

Chi Beta Phi Elects McKeever President

Hobart McKeever, sophomore of Greensboro, has just been elected to the presidency of Chi Beta Phi, honorary scientific fraternity, succeeding Warren Harrelson from Mullins, S. C.

Other officers installed were John Church of Salisbury, vice-president; Fletcher Bailey of Elizabeth City, recording secretary; Bill Stone of Raleigh, corresponding secretary; and Kenneth Henderson of Greenville, treasurer.

Retiring officers were Sherrill Gregory of Hays, vice-president; David Seifert of Weldon, recording secretary; Bennett Crech of Selma, corresponding secretary; and Bill Stone, treasurer.

Plans were made to attend the national convention of the Chi Beta Phi to be held in Ashland, Va., May 2 and 3.

be at a disadvantage under this system was pointed out. The poor man depends for his existence on his job, but if he were drawn into army service for a year his job would not wait for his return and he might very possibly find himself out of work. On the other hand, the man who is an executive and has an interest in the business will not find himself unemployed at the end of his service. The fact that army training would develop a militaristic spirit in the men of the nation who would be trained in large numbers under this system, was emphasized.

Army efficiency would emphasize the fact that democratic government is not the most efficient form, and would thus bring about an advocacy of a more socialistic and militaristic government. Again it was stated that a large two-ocean navy would prevent the necessity of a large army by keeping invaders out of striking distance. Rebuttal brought out the added fact that the present national guard was believed to be an adequate reserve.
