

SPRING IN ALL ITS GLORY has come to Chapel Hill. There are blossoms in the arboretum, Davie Poplar is green again, and coed sports are becoming distinctly noticeable.

Guilford Choir Joins UNC Symphony For Concert Here This Afternoon

Program Includes Several Numbers By U.S. Composers

The Guilford college A Cappella choir of 45 carefully chosen voices and the University Symphony orchestra will appear in a joint concert this afternoon at 5 o'clock in Hill Music hall. Directing the choir will be Dr. Ezra H. Weis and the orchestra will be under the baton of Dr. Benjamin Swalin, faculty member of the University music department.

Sponsored by Graham Memorial the concert, open to the public, is one of a series which the choir is presenting while on a spring tour of North and South Carolina, Georgia and Florida.

Organized for 13 years the choir normally consists of 80 trained singers, but for the concert tour 45 members have been selected. The choral group has, during its history, appeared in nearly all states east of the Mississippi.

The University orchestra which is participating on the joint program is composed of faculty members, students, townspeople, and local high school students. The first concert of the school year was presented last November.

The symphony orchestra was organized in 1905 by the late Charles Woollen, at that time controller of the University. Then it consisted merely of a group of local townspeople, as the University music department had not yet been installed. Mainly through the work of Woollen the department was set up in 1920 and since that time the orchestra has achieved wide notice for its work, appearing in concerts in numerous neighboring cities.

The program for the concert this afternoon will begin with two selections by the orchestra, the introduction, the intermezzo ("Borghild's Dream"), and the triumphal march from Grieg's "Suite from Sigurd Jorsalfar," and Rimsky-Korsakov's

"Tale of the Kalendar Prince," from "Scheherazade."
The choir will then sing a group of songs mostly by American composers, "Hozannah in Excelsis," Lockwood, "Let the Words of My Mouth," Hyde, "Ave Marie," Archer, "Legend of the Bells," Rhodes, "Sleep Holy Babe," Ganschow, and "Easter Bells," Christiansen.

To conclude the program the choir accompanied by the orchestra will sing Franck's setting of "Psalm 150."

McLeod tied with Ike Hanff of State at 12 feet for first in the pole vault. Pat Patterson and Vaughan Winborne, former Tar Heel leaders, were one-two in the high jump.

Leading scholastic performance was that of McKenzie of Salisbury, who outdistanced Tyndall of Greenville in the Junior AAU mile in 4:36.8. Boxed three times in the first 660 yards, McKenzie broke loose to overtake the 1940 high school champion; he is 1941 champ.

Two hundred of the 670 students at Norwich university are freshmen. There will be only 52 graduating cadets in June.

Spring, Young Man's Fancy--Coeds in Brief Sports Dress

By Mary Caldwell

Comes spring and the men students finally become aware of coed sports—tennis, golf, baseball, skeet shooting, badminton, swimming, archery—Margie Johnston chasing a tennis ball, Sara Ruark practicing her putting, Frenchie Gibson catching flies in the outfield, Martha Clappitt getting the "bird," Frances Dyckman in a gay-colored swim suit, Jean Hahn striking a pose with a bow and arrow.

It seems to take warm weather, with the girls scampering about the tennis courts and the coed field in brightly-colored shorts and flying skirts, for the campus as a whole fully to realize that coed sports and the Woman's Athletic association exist, and have existed throughout the winter.

Nor are the Carolina coed athletes big, muscley, straight-haired creatures who gallop about the field in orgies of exercise. Coed sports draw their participants from girls, pretty girls, attractive girls, personality girls—girls like Diddy Kelly, Dot Jackson, Katherine Gould, Ella-Keen Steel—girls who exercise for the same reason the men do: to have fun and to keep in shape.

Carolina coeds have been able to secure a physical education "minor" only during the last 2 years. Ten years ago when Mrs. J. G. Beard, director of physical education for women, came to the University to do extension work, there was no active, organized sports program for women. Soon President Graham was persuaded to buy a few bows and arrows for the girl students; and that year 20 girls were taught to shoot.

Archery continued for several years, until Mrs. Beard was made official part-time instructor and a few classes were organized in tennis, basketball, and archery. Part of the basketball games were held out-of-doors; while the rest were played in Bynum hall, the old gymnasium.

Several years later, in 1938, Mrs. Beard was made full-time director, and in 1939 a program was arranged whereby coeds could get a physical education minor by taking at least 20 quarter hours of regular physical education classes. Studies include the administration, principles, and teaching of physical education with emphasis placed on swimming, baseball, basketball, and various types of dancing.

The purpose of the instruction is to equip girls to teach physical education in high schools in addition to their major subject. This year 20 girls are working on their "minors."

However, most of the girl students do not enter into sports "for credit." Extra-curricular athletics draw the majority of the girls and are conducted by the students through the Woman's Athletic association. Already this spring over 50 girls have signed up to participate in the purely extra-curricular tennis tournament; 16 girls have enrolled in senior life-saving class; 5 in instructor's life saving class; 20 in the standard first-aid course.

Also scheduled for this spring are extensive coed programs in baseball, archery, golf, fencing, and riflery. Throughout the year the "group" game sports, such as hockey and baseball have taken the form of intramural tournaments. For each of the major sports, two leagues competed for the championship—one league being composed of girls living in Spencer, Dorms 1 and 2, and the other league being made up from girls living in the sorority houses and Archer house. Four hockey teams were active during the fall quarter; while eight basketball teams scrambled and shot during the winter quarter.

Marjorie Johnston, president of WAA, explains the slight shift in emphasis towards coeducational recreational sports as a "sensible, progressive action"—smoothing the way for double enjoyment of sports after students leave school, with the girls being skillful enough to hold their own in sports with men.

Officers of the WAA this year have been Marjorie Johnston, president; Ann Williams, vice-president; Caroline Dalton, treasurer; and Jean Lindsay, secretary.

Next year's officers, who will take over soon, are Diddy Kelly, president; Breezy Breazeale, vice-president; Eva Mae Nee, secretary; and Randy Mebane, treasurer.
