House Crowned King As Playmakers Enact Traditional Revels

Administrative Dean R. B. House was crowned King of the Carolina Playmakers' annual Twelfth Night Revels as the feature of the Playmakers' 15th annual celebration of Old Christmas, held last night in their theater.

Miss Josephine Niggli of the Playmaker staff was crowned Queen. "Proff" Fred Koch, director of the Playmakers, performed the ceremonies.

"Proff" Koch reminded the audience that this traditional Old English celebration, held later than usual this year on account of the change in holidays, is still cherished as "Old Christmas" in the remote coves of the Great Smoky Mountains and in some of the isolated communities of the sea islands off the coast of North Carolina, notably Rodanthe, Waves and Salvo.

The date of 12th Night is January 5, 12 days after Christmas and commemorates the visit of the Wise Men to the manger, celebrated in the church calendar as Epiphany.

Dr. Urban T. Holmes, who has always played Sir Toby Belch in the Tavern Scene, has been called to Washington on war duty, and his part was taken by Arthur Conescu. Malvolio was, as before, played by Prof. Sam Selden.

Highlights of the evening included two original songs, "Revels Are Tradition" and "We're a Grand Old Gant," both with lyrics by Lucile Culbert and Budie Westover.

has produced such work as his discovery that variable stars hold the key to stellar distances, "a discovery which gave the world a new conception of the universe."

Other studies of his have led to a new realization of the shape of the universe and of the place of the sun and its planetary system within the Milky Way.

His interests range all the way from exposing spurious spiritualists to studying the relation of heat and speed in ants. He went off on this latter tangent when the heavens were relatively quiet. Not until he had worked out the relationship did Shapley return to astronomy.

Further proof of this ability is his appointment as chairman of the Science Service in Washington, the premier organization in the world for popularization of scientific knowledge.

RAESE

the state, something unheard of for a school of that size.

Raese's system is a mixture of a fast break, and it is based on expert ball handling and tricky passing. He is a stickler for details and spends hours drilling basketball fundamentals into his players. His teams always control the ball a lot, and as he puts it, "we try to hold the ball until we get an almost certain scoring play." Proof of the system is the fact that his last Virginia team had only one man in the starting lineup over six feet tall.

Results of his system will have to be proven here. Raese has had hard luck with his hardwood boys as they are "here today and gone tomorrow" which greatly hampers teamwork. A record of three wins and four losses is almost batting .500 and a victory tomorrow over State would even up the count.
