Mr. Truman accepted the gift, and took his vow—to continue the fight for the domestic policies of the New Deal, and the foreign policy of international cooperation, laid down by Franklin Roosevelt. "It was largely because of him," Mr. Truman said, "that civilization has survived. May Almighty God give us the wisdom to carry on in the way of Franklin Roosevelt."

Distinguished Visitors Join Academic Procession

Event Will Bring Brilliant Conclusion To Colorful Sesquicentennial Ceremony

By Mary Hill Gaston

President Frank P. Graham will present honorary degrees from the University to 39 people this morning in Memorial Hall in a program which will follow a colorful academic procession of the 350 Sesquicentennial delegates and many University faculty members. The procession will start at 10:20 o'clock and the program at 10:30.

Dr. Edmund E. Day, president of Cornell University, and Dr. Graham will be the morning's principal speakers. President Day's topic will be "The Mobilization of Education in a Free Society" and President Graham's "A Look Ahead."

All faculty offices will be closed for the program and there will be seats for students and faculty members wishing to attend.

Greatest Number

In awarding a large number of honorary degrees, this being the greatest number ever presented here at one time, the University will be following a long-established custom of colleges and universities on such occasions. Administration officials have withheld names of the recipients, wishing to make them public first today at Memorial Hall. It is rumored, however, that some of the best-known figures in the United States are on campus now to receive University recognition.

It has been revealed that 23 of the recipients are eminent scholars—nine in the natural sciences, eight in the social sciences and six in humanities. Fifteen are in public life and business. Twenty-six were born in the South and two others, born elsewhere, are now working in the South. Fifteen have or have had definite connections with North Carolina. Eight are alumni, and all but three are listed in "Who's Who."

Two Years Work

A faculty committee headed by Dr. Ray Newsome began two years ago to study a list of recommendations of eminent men in various fields, working from nominations made in general faculty meetings. The committee studied the nominations and conferred on the subject with a trustee committee. The whole faculty voted on the nominations, and those selected were presented.

Syracuse Dramatist Visiting Playmakers

Mr. Sawyer Falk, president of the National Theatre Conference and head of the department of dramatic art at Syracuse University, is visiting the Carolina Playmakers this weekend while here at Carolina as a delegate to the Sesquicentennial Celebration.

In the interest of the National Theatre Conference Mr. Falk is attending classes in the Playmakers Theatre and talking with Mr. Selden and his staff members about current dramatic problems in small theatres. Among vital information Mr. Falk is seeking is the effect of returned servicemen in small theatres, which were hard hit by the war.

Interested in playwriting, Mr. Falk is trying to find the capacity of the community theatre to stage original plays instead of recent Broadway productions, and he wants to learn more about the Playmakers Experimental productions here. Also, Mr. Falk is concerned with the opinion of university and community theatres on "the inclination of the community theatre toward professionalization" from the standpoint of the actor.

Governor Cherry Calls Youth Of North Carolina No. 1 Asset

Governor Compliments University At Banquet Starting Celebration

The Governor of North Carolina, R. Gregg Cherry, speaking before the delegates and guests of the University's Sesquicentennial banquet last night, called the young people of the state its No. 1 asset and congratulated the University on the splendid job it has been doing for the past 150 years in training the state's youth.

"Our young people are just about the most self-reliant young people on earth," the governor said. "Here at Chapel Hill many generations of fine men and women have attended the school of their dreams. This institution holds an enviable place in the hearts of our people."

"This is indeed 'a University of the people,'" the governor went on to say. "And that is at the same time the secret of its greatness and the assurance of its future. This ancient temple of learning with its unparalleled heritage and great record of achievement, still has its eyes fixed on the stars at the same time that its roots are set deep in the soil and the traditions of North Carolina."

"I salute our state university now beginning the 152 year of its service. The great state that we have in North Carolina has been made greater by it," Governor Cherry concluded.
