Four States Represented

Yack Snapshots Are Still Needed

"Are drinking and partying the only activities of the Carolina gentlemen and Miss Carolina Coed when they're not in classes?" Bill Duncan, the occupant of the hard Yack chair known as the office of picture coordinator, asked yesterday.

The usually genial Duncan was plainly a little discouraged with the snapshots turned in to the yearbook office. In fact, his survey of the aggregation of photos was only worrying him.

"You know," he declared, "there are many things on this campus which belong in the Yack. I don't mean just the Bell tower and the library and the list of accomplishments after a senior's name; I mean all of the little things that make college days a memorable time in our life.

"We want those things in the Yack. Of course, these party scenes are fine, but we want the other things. Sports pictures, the game and the crowd, Y court shots, pictures of friends that will be the key to a lot of happy memories after Carolina days and friends are behind us."

He commented that he had been trying all winter to get the pictures which he knows exist on the campus brought into the Yack's GM office where they could be used in the Yack and returned undamaged to the owner.

At last reports there were ten pages of the big book waiting on snapshots to fill them, and Duncan and a good sized staff waiting to do the filling.

"Any student who has a photograph at all pertinent to the campus is again urged," Duncan said "to turn that snapshot in for a better Yack and one that is as representative as possible of all that Carolina is."

Methodists Lead UNC Enrollment

A survey compiled by the Central Records office of enrollment statistics for the fall quarter show that there really should be no cause for rivalry between here and Duke university, for one out of every four University students are of the Methodist faith.

The total of 1870 Methodists was closely followed by 1705 who registered a preference for the Baptist church, the statistics show. Coming third are the Presbyterians, 1220 strong, to make up the three major religious denominations represented in the University's last quarter enrollment of 7,528.

The numerically minor groups were the Episcopalians, 875; Christian-Disciples, 152; Protestants 337; Catholics, 291; Jews, 245; and the Lutherans, 137.

The fifth largest category in the break-down were the 378 students who either indicated "no religious preference" on the registration cards, or else did not bother to fill out the forms.

Other faiths at the school included 47 Congregational-Christians, 32 Christian Scientists, 44 Reformists, 57 Moravians, and 30 members of the Greek Orthodox church.

Among those students listing the more esoteric denominations were three Adventists, four Pentecostal Holiness members, four representatives of the Associated Reformed Presbyterian church, three United Presbyterians, nine members of the Church of Christ, two of the Russian Orthodox, three Universalists, three Mormons, four members of the United church, two Mohammedans, two Hindus, and one Anglican.

Quarterly Bill Is Recommended By Legislature

By Chuck Hauser

The coed members of the Student Legislature definitely were not "sitting and knitting" last night, but were up in arms over the constitutional amendment which would give the Legislature power to review all legislation passed by the Coed Senate "if it deemed such action necessary."

Their protests were all in vain, however, as the bill to amend the constitution passed along with amendments to constitutionally legalize the court of the Interfraternity council and to give the Legislature the power of impeachment of student government officials.

Quarterly Deferred
The bill to establish a literary quarterly at the University was recommended at the recommendation of the Finance committee, while a bill to amend the constitution to delete the section categorizing offenses against the student body was defeated, in spite of the efforts of Legislator Ernie House, who stated, "This would be a law taking the place of the Campus Code, which is part of our tradition, and has worked beautifully. For that reason, I recommend that this section be deleted from the constitution."

Under new business on the agenda, the law-making body heard Speaker pro tem Miles Smith present a measure to establish a committee to study the possibilities of setting up a campus post office.

Law, Med Courts
From the special committee set up to look into the judicial provisions of the constitution under the leadership of Basil Sherrill came a proposed constitutional amendment to put into that document provisions for honor courts for the Law and Medical schools.

Also from the committee came recommendations and a bill to amend the constitution to abolish the appellate jurisdiction of the Student council. The amendment provides for the council to hear political and constitutional cases, and to be composed of nine members, at least two of which must be coeds, to be appointed by the president of the student body subject to a two-thirds vote of approval by the Student Legislature.

Chicago University Forum
CCUN State Director Lincoln Kan was extended the privilege of the floor to present a bill to the Legislature providing for at least two delegates to be financially backed on a trip to Chicago to attend the University of Chicago Forum intercollegiate convention on the United Nations.

Parliamentarian Pete Gerns introduced an amendment bill to move the inauguration date for student government officials up from the third Tuesday in April until the third Tuesday in May. (See LEGISLATURE, page 4)

All students are invited.

Cherry Says He Does Not Seek Loophole In Feud With President on Civil Rights

Raleigh, Feb. 26—(UP)—Governor R. Gregg Cherry stated today that he is not looking for a loophole so that North Carolina Democrats can sidestep President Truman's Civil Rights program.

Cherry's comment was made in connection with the proposal of Governor William Tuck of Virginia that Virginia legislators okay omission from the election ballot of names of candidates for presidential electors who would cast their votes exactly as directed by state party leaders. The voter could cast his ballot only for electors—and a party convention or committee could dictate how the electors would vote.

The governor said he does not know whether he would set the pattern for the Southern states in answer to President Truman's plan. He says it might prove to be a loophole other states could use in opposing the Civil Rights program.

He added, "I'm not looking for a loophole. I'm trying to take care of North Carolina's problems and keep the state together."

It would take a special session of the state legislature to follow the pattern under consideration in the neighboring state of Virginia, he said indicating that he is no more favorably inclined than before to a special session of the North Carolina General Assembly.

No Quizes

A letter reminding all faculty members about the University regulation against giving hour quizzes during the week of March 8-12 was sent out by Chancellor Robert B. House this week.

South building officials said that this reminder is being made due to several complaints from students that some professors gave hour exams during the last week of scheduled classes last quarter, a practice that is forbidden by University rule.
