Mag Says MacArthur Stand Should Arouse Protest Cry

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—(UP)—The magazine Editor & Publisher said editorially today that Gen. Douglas MacArthur's barring of the press from the executions of seven convicted Japanese war criminals "should arouse a cry of protest from the American press."

"The people of the world who suffered because of Japanese aggression are entitled to know intimately the manner of their fate," the editorial said. "The English-speaking people, particularly the Americans, who sacrificed so much in human life and economic wealth for four years to defeat these militarists, must be told the true story of the executions."

Editor & Publisher said rumors already were being spread as to the status of the convicted Japanese, including reports of suicides, and that "such stories will multiply with the telling."

In its news column, the magazine recalled that the United Press, the Overseas Press club of Japan, and the Tokyo Correspondents club have appealed the MacArthur ruling but that Army Secretary Kenneth Royall said the matter was up to MacArthur. The article pointed out that press correspondents, who at first were barred from witnessing the 1946 hangings of 11 Nazi war criminals at Nuernberg, finally broke down official resistance and attending the executions on the basis of two representatives from each of the four powers.

"The reversal of the military edict came after a series of editorials and of messages to the War department, spearheaded by the United Press," the magazine said.

Henry Ford Says Private Schools Have to Compete

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—(UP)—Henry Ford II, president of the Ford Motor company, said today that private colleges and universities must compete with tax-supported institutions to keep education from becoming a government monopoly.

Ford spoke at the annual class agent dinner of Yale university alumni fund association.

"I am very much against an educational system that depends entirely on the state with a capital 'S'—that is, centralized under government control or supervision," Ford declared. "I am against it because I don't think it would be any good. I don't think it would be worth what we would pay for it. It would suffer from all the faults of every monopoly. It would grow fat and unimaginative. It would continually take the easy way. But worse than that, it would tend to teach the views of the government in power."

Faculty Talk To Be Given By Prof. Huse

Professor Howard Huse of the romance languages department will deliver the faculty lecture in humanities Wednesday night in Gerrard hall at 8:30.

The lecture, one of a series sponsored by the undergraduate division of humanities, is open for the entire university community.

Professor Huse will lecture on "Dante's Divine Comedy." He plans to describe and appraise this major monument so as to inform a general audience about it.

Prof. Raymond Adams of the English department has said that perhaps the most quoted remark about Dante is Carlyle's "in him voice." In saying this Carlyle could hardly have been more ten silent centuries found a wrong, Adams said, for the ten centuries preceding Dante were far from silent. And Dante was quite as much a forerunner of the Renaissance as he was the culmination of the Middle Ages.

But even so Adams continued, Carlyle had a grain of truth in his sentence. One can hardly know the Middle Ages, that period which underlies modern times, without knowing something about Dante. The lecture by Professor Huse will help toward that knowledge.

A graduate of the University of Chicago with a Ph.D. from the same institution, Huse has been here since 1920. He has been serving as chairman of the department of comparative literature since its organization a decade ago and was for several years chairman of the Humanities Division in the Liberal Arts college.

He is author of several books, among them "Psychology of Foreign Language Study," and his latest book, "Reading and Speaking Foreign Language." The book which perhaps attracted greatest attention was his "Illiteracy of the Literate."

"I think education is a national responsibility but should be administered, directed and controlled on a state basis. Every child in each state should have comparable educational opportunities."

"The last Senate passed a bill providing federal aid without federal interference," said Hoey, "but the House failed to act upon this measure. I think the present Congress will pass this bill."

Faculty Hears Talk by Waynick

Capus Waynick, campaign manager for governor-elect Kerr Scott and chairman of the state Democratic Executive committee, spoke before the members of the Faculty club at a luncheon Wednesday.

Speaking of State government problems, and of persons and incidents in the recent presidential election, Waynick mentioned the parallel between the Lincoln campaign and Truman upset.

"In 1862, the prevailing forecasts were that Lincoln would not be reelected, and in August 1864, three months before the election he put down in writing that he did not expect to win."

"The difference between Lincoln and Truman was that Truman did not agree with the forecasts. When I talked with him in Raleigh he told me he thought he would win, and I was convinced and still am, that he really did think so."

Waynick spoke with the President when Mr. Truman visited Raleigh last October. Waynick has had a long-standing acquaintance with the President, and it was evident to Waynick's listeners at the luncheon that he held him in high esteem.

"Some people have criticized President Truman for what they have called his 'littleness' and 'inaptitude,'" he said. "I think these critics are mistaken in their estimate of him."
