More Dormitory Telephones Will Be Provided By Spring

By Margaret Gaston
Nine dormitories in the upper and lower quadrangles will have an additional phone installed on the third floor by April, Frank Kilpatrick, secretary of the Men's Interdormitory council, announced yesterday.

J. S. Bennett, director of operations of the University, authorized the council to announce plans for expanding the communication system.
Dormitories affected include Everett, Lewis, Graham, Aycock, Stacy, Mangum, Manley, Ruffin, and Grimes. Tentative plans call for new telephones to be installed on the third floors of these dormitories. The dorms already have phones on the first floor.

The additional telephones will definitely not be connected to two-party lines, Kilpatrick said.

Telephones are available now and the lines have been installed in the dormitories. The delay is in the date of delivery of coin boxes to be installed with the instruments. Delivery of the coin boxes is expected in April, and installation of the phones will proceed immediately thereafter, according to Kilpatrick.

Plans are underway for installing an inter-communication system in one of the dormitories which is divided into three sections. If the project proves successful, the system will be extended to the other dorms. Those affected would be Old West, Old East, Steele, and Battle-Vance-Pettigrew.

The holdup on the inter-communication system is a lack of phone booths and coin boxes. There is one phone booth available which will be installed in Old East.

The Interdormitory council has been working on the telephone project since November.

The selection board was composed of four representatives of each campus political party, with the holdover member of the Men's Honor council, Bruce Sanborn, sitting as chairman. British Note To Hungary Hints Action

May Investigate Cardinal's Trial

LONDON, Feb. 10—(UP)—Great Britain warned Hungary for the second time today that it reserved the right to investigate "any and every" act in connection with the trial of Joseph Cardinal Mindszenty which might violate Hungary's peace treaty.

Alexander K. Helm, British minister in Budapest, delivered the warning to the Hungarian Foreign office in a note sent by Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin. Bevin also called Janos Eros, Hungarian minister here, to the Foreign office, handed him a copy of the note, and rebuked him sharply for his government's attitude toward this country.

Britain warned Hungary Feb. 4, in protesting against the exclusion of a British observer from the Mindszenty trial, that it reserved its rights under the peace treaty.

Hungary summarily rejected the British protest Feb. 7, and charged Britain with trying to aid "Fascist enemies of the Hungarian Republic."

Bevin talked to Hungarian Minister Eros about 30 minutes. A Foreign office spokesman said Bevin called Eros's attention to the "extremely discourteous rejoinder to the reasonable and justified request made by the British government to have observers at the 'Mindszenty trial.'"

Bevin said also that the British public and the press had shown "strong feeling" about the circumstances in which the trial was conducted.
