Trio Concert Is Scheduled Sunday Night

Robertson to Be
Program Feature

The Vielle-Trio, featuring Du Bose Robertson, will give a program of music of the Middle Ages and Renaissance in Hill hall Sunday night at 8:30, under the auspices of Graham Memorial with the cooperation of the University music department.

The trio is composed of Franz Siedersbeck and Beatrice Dohme, altovielle, and Werner Landshoff, tenor-vielle.

Organized in 1947, the trio is the only ensemble in the United States specializing in the interpretation of the music of the Gothic and Renaissance and in the playing of some of the instruments of those periods.

During the first half of that season, the group was introduced in its present form to a number of well-known musicians and scholars in New York, Washington, and Baltimore. A number of public appearances resulted from these private concerts, the first of which was a concert during the annual convention of the Music Teachers National association in Boston. Among others, the ensemble was acclaimed at the Metropolitan Opera club in New York and at Harvard university.

The vielles were the string-instruments of the Middle Ages and were used until about the middle of the 16th century. During the Renaissance they were succeeded by the viols and the viola da gamba, direct predecessors of the modern violin family.

The Inside Story

Planetarium Arranged Like Ordinary Theater

(Ed. note: This is the second in a series of articles on the Morehead planetarium and art gallery. The third installment, which will be a description of an actual demonstration, will appear in tomorrow morning's Daily Tar Heel.)

By Herb Nachman

"What is a planetarium and how will it benefit the average University student?"

This is the question that has been turning over in the minds of a student body which has watched and wondered for a year and a half.

Watched the construction of the exterior of a project that started out at a conservative $1,000,000 and has soared to more than $2,000,000 since it was begun.

The riveting and hammering are over. The bricks and mortar have taken shape. A building has emerged and students are ready to know what will make the John Motley Morehead planetarium tick.

Imagine yourself an average student who has decided to visit the planetarium for a scheduled demonstration. The demonstrations usually begin about 3 o'clock in the afternoon and since the room only seats 500 you go early.

Waiting in line to enter the planetarium room may be compared to waiting in line at the Carolina theater for the late show on Saturday night. There are many people, however, who will not be admitted. When the 500 mark is reached the doors will be swung closed.

Joint admission to the art gallery and planetarium involves about 60 cents in cash, including tax. A sign above the ticket office indicates, "Special admission rates for groups."

Your guide explains that the reason for the entrance fee is for upkeep of the building so that the state legislature will not be forced to appropriate for the purpose.

As you approach the blind corridor leading into the planetarium room itself, you glance about the entrance lobby. Everything is highly polished marble. Behind the small ticket window is a business office where accountants are busily administering the upkeep of the building.

Everything is finely decorated, not lavishly, but in good taste. The usher at the door takes your ticket and tells you to please watch your step while in the "blind corridor." There are three doors in the corridor. The middle one is a swinging door.

Just Too Many Keys

Versatile Miss Godbee Searches For Owners of Homeless Articles

By Don Maynard

"We'd rather have the car than just the keys we have to a new Chevrolet," said Miss Mary Godbee as she proudly exhibited her efficient YMAA Lost and Found department located in the Y building.

And she wasn't speaking of just one key, nor of just one car. The Lost and Found office has in the filing cabinet that serves as home for errant properties well over 100 keys—of all sizes and shapes, from a locket key no more than an inch long to a comparatively huge four-inch house key.

Miss Godbee is a graduate of Georgia State College for Women capable of wedging a telephone between her head and shoulder, at the same time carrying on a conversation with the party at the other end, sorting mimeographed sheets and stapling them together, and beaming her sparkling smile in any direction.

In addition to all this charm, she manages one of the gears that keeps the Carolina student's semi-mechanical life running smoothly. Have you lost your keys, glasses, cigarette lighter, your fountain pen, pipe or auto rear-view mirror? Take a look in the Y Lost and Found cabinet. Chances are you will find it there.

Yes, all that miscellany, and more too. There are varied (See LOST, FOUND, page 4)

Highway Route Plan Approved

DURHAM, Feb. 15—A new plan to change the original route of entry of the proposed new Durham-Chapel Hill boulevard was studied and approved individually, today by representatives of the city of Durham, the Chamber of Commerce, Duke university, and the state Highway department.

The proposed changes would give the boulevard an entirely new route of entry as it approaches Durham. R. Getty Browning, chief locating engineer, drew up the plans after residents of the Duke section offered considerable opposition to the first proposal which called for an entrance at the intersection of route 751 and Duke University road.

The almost straight stretch of road from Chapel Hill to Durham, as was presented today, would have the following changes:

From the New Hope sewage treatment plant eastward to a point of connection with Chapel Hill road (US 15 and 501) near Cornwallis road and then with University drive.

Planetarium Fire Damage Is 'Negligible'

Sparks Cause
Blaze in Dome

A fire yesterday morning among the folds of acoustic materials hanging behind the Morehead planetarium dome caused "inconsequential damage" to the $2,000,000 structure, Controller W. D. Carmichael, Jr., reported last night.

Carmichael said the fire was started by a welder working with a blowtorch behind the stainless steel dome of the planetarium chamber. Sparks from the torch ignited a pocket in the acoustic material which he said "had not yet been fireproofed."

Workmen who witnessed the blaze said the Chapel Hill fire department responded to the call and fought the fire, but that it burned itself out before the department could extinguish it.

Dr. Roy K. Marshall, who is working closely with the planetarium chamber, said the damage "was not serious" and that "the steel of the dome was not at all damaged. It is only now a matter of drying and airing the planetarium."

Carmichael reported that the "negligible" damage would not delay the opening of the planetarium which is tentatively set for early in May. He said the main damage resulted from water.

Firefighters had a difficult job in attempting to reach the flames behind the dome which is suspended by steel cables from the roof of the chamber. Consequently, witnesses reported, the firemen were forced to use an excess amount of water in an attempt to gain control of the flames.

No official estimate of the damage was available last night. However, Carmichael said that insurance agents would be in town today and the figure would probably be available sometime late today.

Wins Nomination On First Ballot

Presidential Nominee Defeats Gordon,
Brenengan After Raging Party Debate

With a promise to "show the student body and the other political parties that we can have a government serving the students," Charlie Long entered the presidential race Monday night on the Campus party ticket.

Long received a majority on the first ballot to defeat Dick Gordon, already nominated by the University party, and Wayne Brenengan for the nomination. The vote was taken by vocal roll call of the party membership, resulting in 25 for Long 10 for Brenengan and 9 for Gordon. Three persons abstained.

The CP presidential nominee debate raged for approximately two hours before a vote was finally called. Observers called the meeting "the hottest political circus on campus in a long time." The party, scheduled to nominate its candidates for vice-president and secretary-treasurer the same evening, postponed its next order of business until tomorrow afternoon at 5 o'clock.

Long, the CP candidate for the presidency, first came into the political scene this year when a petition supporting him for the presidency was signed by "around 800 students," as estimated by President Jess Dedmond Monday night.

The candidate served for nine months as the first chairman of the Carolina Forum. During his term of office, which lasted through the end of last fall quarter, the forum brought such speakers as Sen. Robert Taft and Gov. J. Strom Thurmond to the campus to speak.

Long was a member of the coalition cabinet last fall, and was elected to two one-year terms as a member of the Student legislature. As a member of the legislature Finance committee, he helped draw up the first student budget under the new constitution. He served on the Ways and Means committee, and as chairman of the special committee on seating arrangements in Kenan stadium, he helped give students 1,000 additional seats between the 40 and 50-yard line at football games.

He was elected speaker pro tempore of the legislature in the spring of 1947 and served in that post until the following December. Two issues he consistently fought for in the legislature were redistricting and the retention of appellate power in the Student council.

He introduced the first redistricting bill into the legislature. After it was passed by that body and then vetoed by President Dewey Dorsett, Long introduced a new 16-district bill which was finally passed as the nine-district bill which is now in effect.

CHARLIE LONG was nominated to run for the presidency of the student body at the Campus party meeting in Graham Memorial Monday night. Long was nominated on the first ballot over Wayne Brenengan and Dick Gordon.
