

Today Marks Date Of Iwo Jima Attack

By The Associated Press
 Five years ago a tiny Pacific island became forever a landmark in American history. It was the 19th of February, 1949, that the marines landed at Iwo Jima. Bald Mt. Suribachi atop which was snapped the famous photograph—still dominates the scene today. Windswept beaches remain dotted with wrecked landing craft. Here and there you can spot what was a Japanese pillbox. The rows of white crosses are still there, too.

But Iwo Jima—on D-Day plus five years—has settled into history. Nothing much happens there, and only a handful of bored garrison troops remain. The island serves largely as a weather station.

Today, however, imagine you are a Marine who fought at Iwo. How would you write of the battle? Would you begin at H-hour?

When the Marines first hit the beaches, shortly after 9 o'clock D-Day morning, they expected to take the porkchop-shaped island in about 72 hours of hard fighting. The campaign raged for 26 days and claimed 19,938 American casualties—killed, wounded and missing. Upwards of 23,000 Japanese were slain.

Men of the Fourth and Fifth Marine Divisions made the initial assault landings. They carried out a precarious beachhead on the eastern shore of the island. Navy and Air Force bombardments had pummeled Iwo's defenses for 62 consecutive days.

Before noon the Marines had smashed through heavy defenses to move inland about 500 yards. The beachhead extended some 4,500 yards northward from the base of Mt. Suribachi. Some 7,000 Americans were ashore.

CAMPUS BRIEFS

University Service Station Offers Free Set Of Firestones To Visitors

University Service Station, corner of Franklin and Columbia Streets, will celebrate the completion of its new building this week and give away a set of four new Firestone tires.

The tires will be awarded to some visitor of tomorrow, Tuesday, or Wednesday. All visitors will receive numbered cards and the holder of the number drawn Wednesday night will get the tires.

There will be a second prize of a new Firestone S-151 battery and a third prize of 12 lubrication jobs to be given in the course of a year.

The new Colonial-style building has the most modern and up-to-date service equipment made. It has a spacious show room and a three-bay service room with two hydraulic car lifts and an electric lubricating outfit.

Odus Pendergraft, who started with the station in 1931, operates the business.
