Blue-White Post Mortem

POST MORTEM ARE, as a rule, somewhat dull and uninteresting, but it seems that a rehash of Saturday afternoon's Blue-White game might be of considerable interest to those of us who are wondering just what kind of team King Carl Snavelly is going to field for next year's grid schedule.

A lot of people went away from Kenan Stadium with an even bigger question mark in their mind than they came with. Practically everyone had conceded the game to the Varsity "Blues" before the opening kickoff, thinking the Old Timers were out for little more than an afternoon of exercise.

After Justice had rocked the Blues deep into their own territory with a 60-yard punt, and Big Ted Hazlewood had snagged a stray fumble on the Varsity four-yard marker, the 19,000 sizzling fans were beginning to wonder about the intentions of the "Old Folks." And when Choo Choo chugged around right end to score on a naked sweep and put the "Whites" out front, the 19,000 really grew giddy.

It was just like old times with the big names driving through for an early score. Names like Justice, Pupa, Weiner, Powell, Hazlewood, Mitten, Varney, Fowie, Neikirk, Knox, Clements, and a host of others that will always recall Carolina's "Golden Era of Football." But is that so-called "Golden Era" dead? We think not, and here are a few of the reasons why.

Taking The Acid Test

FIRST OF ALL, the youngsters that made up the varsity—and it seems a little strange to call them "youngsters" after watching the old heads cavort in the familiar blue and white for the past several years—were using the game mainly as a proving ground for their new A-Formation. Oh, sure, they were out to win, but more important than winning that game, was putting the new offense to the acid test to see just how well certain plays would work under game conditions—conditions that will be popping up at frequent intervals when the Blue Devils, the Fighting Irish, and the Volunteers are gritting their teeth and digging in on the other side of that unbalanced line.

Probably one of the most alarming factors uncovered by the coaches was the fact that Fullback Billy Hayes will have a hard time putting his throwing arm to use against a hard-charging line next Fall. White tackles, led by Ted Hazlewood, were continually popping up in the spinback's face as he made his complete turn in faking to another back before straightening up to look for his receiver. This continually-alarming factor forced Hayes to hurry his throws on several occasions and allowed him very little time to spot his ends.

Used to the heretofore-conventional Snavelly single-wing, Bullet Billy had a hard time of it when he was not allowed to drop straight back with his eyes constantly on the receivers. Of course the Grey Fox will do something to iron out this major kink in the "A" before the Tar Heels go against N. C. State on Sept. 23 in the 1950 curtain-raiser. The most plausible solution to the ticklish problem seems to entail the dropping some of the deceptiveness of the formation on this type of pass play in order to enable the fullback to fade straight back, thus adding to his passing effectiveness. And so, the problem stands.

Power Plays Plentiful

ON THE OTHER SIDE of the ledger, however, there were some very good news for Tar Heel fans and coaches alike. The most noticeable improvement over the old single-wing being the devastating inside plays that evolve from the "A". With the deepback a full two yards behind the normal position of a single-wing fullback, the up-the-middle power plays clicked with clocklike precision, aided no little by the pile-driving plunges of Deepbacks George Verchick and Bud Wallace. If Hosea Rodgers were running from the "A", somebody in the opposing front line would likely be maimed if they tried standing in the hole—the new offense is that powerful.

The reverse plays which looked only mediocre throughout most of the past season, also showed improvement from the "A". Bob (Goo Goo) Gantt, running like a jet-propelled fullback, broke off left and on one particular play with the ball resting in midfield and would possibly have gone all the way had he not been chased out of bounds by the barest of margins as he hit his stride after gaining some 15 yards. The pint-sized wingback kept right on going after being run out, and wasn't stopped until he stumbled while trying to slow down after cutting back onto the playing field.

The outside game as a whole was only adequate, however, despite a number of nice plays around the ends. The big deficiency seemed to be that the offensive ends were letting their men slip by them before the ball-carrier had rounded the flank, thus allowing the defensive men to take out the interference or nab the runner before the play was well under way. The deficiency here seems not to be a very serious one, however, and should be ironed out if not erased completely with the simple tonic of more practice.

Golfers End Dual Season With Match Against Duke

After over a week's layoff from competition, Carolina's golfers will end their dual meet season this afternoon when they play the 1949 Southern Conference team champion, Duke, at the Hope Valley course. The first foursome will tee off at 1:30. This will be the first dual match for the Tar Heels since they handed Wake Forest an 18-9 licking back on April 20. Pruitt Takes Three Firsts For Visitors

By Bill Peacock

Norcross finished ahead of Cecil Pless of Carolina and Art Mason of Wake Forest to win the low hurdles in 25.5.

Locals Return From Trip; To Face State Nine Today

By Lew Chapman

Back in their own stomping grounds following a disappointing road trip, Carolina's baseballers will begin a back-to-the-wall stand over the next two weeks in a desperate effort to avoid the most disastrous season of the past several years.

This afternoon at 4 o'clock, State's rampaging Wolfpack will be at Emerson Stadium to try and retain their unblemished record over the Tar Heels. The locals have been beaten twice already this year by the Raleigh collegians.

Although well out of contention for the Southern Conference and Big Four races, the Carolina club will still play a big part in determining the eventual winner. Of the eight remaining contests on the schedule, seven are against Big Four competition.

Both State and Wake Forest will be out for the Tar Heel's scalp in their effort to annex the two crowns, so the locals appear to have a long, tough road to hoe in an attempt to salvage something from the present dismal campaign.

Dean Cassell is slated to take the hill for the Hearmen in today's clash with the Wolfpack, the first of three games left with State. The Cow College nine, finally beaten by Wake Forest last Saturday after rolling up an amazing 12 game winning skein, will probably throw sophomore Lunsford Lewis against the Tar Heels.

Tennis Team Meets State Away Today

After handing five northern teams a few lessons in tennis, Carolina's varsity netters will return to Southern Conference competition this afternoon when they go to State College to meet the Wolfpack.

At the same time the Tar Baby racketmen will be playing host to the State freshmen on the varsity courts.

The Tar Heels completed their tour into Yankeealand without a loss and only in two meets, against Dartmouth and Harvard, did they lose one game. They blanked Williams, Massachusetts, and Wesleyan by 9-0 scores. Meets with the Southern Conference leaders, William and Mary, and with Yale were rained out.

The victories on the top brought the Carolina win string to 22, with losses having come at the hands of Davidson and Miami.

Captain Clark Taylor will again be leading the Tar Heels and will be followed by Charlie Rice. Heath Alexander will remain at the number three spot with dependable Don Skakle playing out of fourth. Jim Winstead and Bob Luxenburg will handle the fifth and sixth positions.

Frosh Nine Meets State At 3 Today

The Tar Baby baseball nine travels to Raleigh today to engage the State freshmen at 3 o'clock in the third of a five game series between the two teams.

State will return here on Saturday for the fourth game. Also scheduled this week is a game with Duke in Durham tomorrow and on Thursday a game with Greensboro High on Emerson Field. The Tar Babies knocked off Greensboro earlier in the season, 13-7.

The season's record for Carolina as a result of the 8-2 win over Statesville on Saturday is five wins and five losses with eight to ten games left in the next weeks according to whether or not the postponed games are played.

Friday—the only open day for the Tar Babies this week—may be filled with a contest with Wake Forest that was postponed last week. The High Point game has not yet been rescheduled.

Lacrossemen To Open Tour With U. Va.

The Tar Heel lacrosse team, 23 strong, will depart from Chapel Hill by bus this afternoon for Charlottesville, Va., where they will engage the University of Virginia stickmen in a lacrosse contest tomorrow afternoon.

Carolina's lacrossemen will meet a strong Baltimore University team on Friday afternoon in Baltimore. Coach Darden's stickmen will be sporting a 3 and 4 record while Virginia, composed of All-Americans, will be out to dump the locals.

Baltimore University will enter the Carolina contest with a perfect record; winning six straight games. The Bees defeated Western Maryland 13-4 while the Tar Heels beat the Terrors 12-4.

By tallying three goals each on Saturday, Hal Taylor and George Levine pushed themselves up the ladder in the scoring race. Taylor and Jess Greenbaum are now tied with seven goals while Johnny Murchison and George Levine have five apiece.

Jess Greenbaum	7	3
Hal Taylor	7	3
John Murchison	5	1
George Levine	5	2
Art Greenbaum	3	10
