Dr. L. R. Wilson and Librarian Charles E. Rush, chairman and secretary of the Friends of the Library, said yesterday.

Reporting on various gifts and contributions made to the library during the past year, Dr. Wilson also announced that John Sprunt Hill, Durham, donated $5,000 in cash, credited to the Hill North Carolina Room Furnishings Fund, for use in the purchase of furnishings for the new North Carolina Reading Room in the library.

Mr. Hill also added to the Hill Endowment of North Carolina Fund the gift of a third piece of business property in Chapel Hill, the net income of which is to be used for the acquisition of North Carolina materials.

Miss Gertrude Weil, Goldsboro, contributed $1,000 in cash to the Leslie Weil Memorial Library Fund for the purchase of basic Hebrew materials. The children of the late Leslie Weil made their annual birthday gift of $125 in cash for the purchase of significant books inscribed in his memory.

MacNider, former Dean of the UNC Medical School, contributed the first edition of the rare "Experiments and Observations" by William Beaumont; three bound volumes of reprints of Prof. John Abel; his first microscope, a student microscope and accompanying knife, and eight volumes of reprints of his own writings.

An original oil portrait of Dr. Archibald Henderson, painted by Walter Tittle, was presented in honor of Dr. Henderson's 50 years of service to the University by his sister, Mrs. Lyman A. Cotten and other members of the family for addition to the Archibald Henderson Collection of Materials Relating to George Bernard Shaw.

Dr. Henderson contributed further Shavian materials (134) including translations of Shaw's writings into foreign languages and books about him in foreign languages for addition to the Shaw Collection.

Snail's-Pace Student Solons Continue Debating By-Laws

By Roy Parker, Jr., Managing Editor

The Student Legislature snail-ed along in its consideration of a new set of by-laws last night—after calling a special session for Monday night to consider bills.

At 9:45 the solons were on page 11 of an 18-page set of by-laws. They had argued an hour over the only major change embodied in the new legislative law—a section setting up a Judiciary Committee. It was finally passed, 14-11.

Only a bare 25-man quorum was present for the meeting, and twice legislators had to submit to quorum calls, once by roll call. The session got so lackadaisical at times that Speaker Herb Mitchell called the body down, describing their conduct as "very undignified."

Most of the sections of the by-laws approved by the body were those dealing with legislative committees and their powers.

Put off until Monday was consideration of two bills, both of which received unfavorable committee action. One would grant the Town Men and Town Women's Associations representation on the Dance Committee, the other would set up a special Legislature committee to delve into Publications Board matters. The PB committee bill was reported out of committee with a recommendation that it be tabled.

The big rub of the evening—over the new Judiciary Committee—brought startling remarks from some legislators. The section simply sets up a regular Legislative committee to handle bills pertaining to judicial matters, but some legislators seemed to think it added extralegal powers to the legislative body.

It provided for a committee to receive, consider, and report measures pertaining to categorization of crimes and punishments, to look over and approve rules of quasi-judicial bodies, and to originate bills "pertaining to the administration of justice."

Legislator Ben Jones, a former member of the Men's Honor Council, argued against the measure because he said it was a "traditional right of the Council to name crimes and punishments." Legislator Ben James thought the section was too vague, although conceding the need for such a committee.

Under the student Constitution, it is a power of the Student Legislature to fix crimes and punishments, as well as to review and approve rules of quasi-

3,575 Voters On Books In Chapel Hill Areas

Chapel Hill led the county with a total of 3,575 qualified electors placed on the list, as the books were closed Saturday on the heaviest registration ever recorded in Orange County.

Approximately 9,000 persons were registered in the county during the open period which covered five Saturday's. Full covered five Saturdays. Full in Chapel Hill and Hillsboro.

Tomorrow is challenge day at the county's 16 precincts and the primary will be held a week later.

Officials have estimated that the figure 9,000 closely approximates the number of persons on the old books prior to the time of their discard and the adoption of a new type of book approved by the last legislature.

The old lists, however, included many who had died or moved away since the time they were last revised. This registration is far the largest and the most accurate that has been conducted in the history of the county.

Next to Chapel Hill, Hillsboro registered the largest number of voters with a total of 1,841. Efland had 562, and an estimated five or six hundred were listed at Carrboro. St. Mary's reported 135, Coles Store 145, Patterson 160, and Rock Springs 200. As yet, no official reports have been received from the remaining precincts.

Dr. Henderson Discusses Measure Setting Up First State University

Provisions of the first bill ever drafted for establishing a state university in North Carolina were listed and discussed here yesterday by Dr. Archibald Henderson, Kenan Professor Emeritus of Mathematics, at a University convocation in connection with the initiation of 101 juniors and seniors into Phi Beta Kappa, and the 47th anniversary of the founding of a chapter of the honor society here.

"Except for the most cursory mention, the bill for establishing the University here has never been printed," Dr. Henderson said. "This document consists of eight large sheets of thick parchment stationery; and is curiously entitled: 'A Bill for Establishing a University in this State to be Distinguished by the Title of the President and Trustees of the North Carolina University."

The essential features of the bill are numerous but the crucial problem which had to be solved was economic: how to make financial provision for the maintenance of a university by a new state almost wholly deficient in funds.

Noting that this was the fourth time he had been asked to give the annual Phi Beta Kappa address here, Dr. Henderson remarked that "I feel that this honor is undeserved for during my undergraduate years, 1894-98, there was no Phi Beta Kappa Society here; and so, in a measure, I am a sort of academic imposter."

"It is without historic significance that a Yale scholar should wish to stimulate the desire for sound scholarship in Chapel Hill; and as soon as it might be possible, to raise the standard to that required for the granting of a charter for a chapter of Phi Beta Kappa," he told the audience. "For perhaps the two most distinguished scholars in the early years of the University were both from Yale: Elisha Mitchell and Denison Olmsted."

Paying tribute to another famous Carolinian, Dr. Henderson said "the preeminence of William R. Davie, in personal influence and lasting usefulness, in the North Carolina of that period should always be borne in mind by every alumnus and alumna of this institution by every member of Phi Beta Kappa, and indeed, by every citizen of North Carolina."

By Andy Taylor
John Motley Morehead was honored here last night when he was presented the annual Di-Phi award for outstanding service to the University, state and nation in a banquet held in the Morehead Planetarium.

Also honored was Professor A. T. Brauer of the University Mathematics Department. He received the faculty award for his outstanding work during the past year.

Graham Jones, Speaker of the Phi Assembly and Editor of the Daily Tar Heel, presided at the dinner, attended by more than 85 members of the two debating societies.

In a talk after receiving the award, Morehead told how the Planetarium came to Carolina.

He originally intended to donate to the University a telescope, he said. On talking with President Frank P. Graham, however, he recognized its impracticability and decided to give a planetarium if one could be found.

On a trip to Sweden in 1930 as personal representative of President Herbert Hoover he discovered the planetarium at an exposition and tried to buy it for the Hayden project in New York.

It was then owned by Germany and he was unable to take it from the country and he gave up. Fifteen years later, however, he was successful in buying the planetarium and bringing it to Baltimore and then to Carolina.

Morehead also affirmed his allegiance to his home state. "I have never considered any place home but North Carolina," he said.

Morehead graduated from the University in 1891. In his senior year he ran for president of the Di but was defeated.

A worker on the Oakridge Nuclear Physics project who has also made contributions to the Navy, Dr. Brauer gave a short talk on the value of mathematics to the student in his life and work.

He thanked the students for recognition of the research being done by its professors. "A university without research is not a university," he said.
