Gold-Plated Touchdowns

GLANCING THROUGH THE OCTOBER issue of True Magazine the other day, I noticed a lengthy and interesting article titled, "Oklahoma and the Touchdown Club." Written by Paul Gardner, a pun-happy sort of guy, the article purported to be an explanation rather than an expose of the Oklahoma grid setup. Gardner tells the whole story of how a third-rate outfit rocketed to the football heights in a few short years at the rate of approximately one coach and a few paltry thousand bucks per annum. It's all very interesting, particularly in the light of the current rumpus being kicked up in Charlottesville, Va., over the non-compliance of the University of Virginia with the NCAA's toothless, useless Sanity Code. Then, too, I remember a recent article in Life magazine that slapped at Carolina and a number of other high-ranking colleges with fair-to-middlin' football teams. One of the first things cited in Gardner's story is the Sooner's Touchdown Club which seems to buy scores at fancy rates. The article in True, if it's true, says, "Oklahoma has a cushy advantage going for it which most colleges would give their philosophy departments, with the dean of women thrown in, to own. It has 700 millionaires—all of them rounding up top talent and delivering same to the campus in Norman."

Speaking of "Squatters Rights"

THE STORY SAYS THAT the Sooner sponsors claim only Oklahoma and the Texas Panhandle as their territory—and this talking turkey with Sugar Bowl officials prior to their meeting with LSU in January, it was made plain to Red Heard, the Bengal Athletic director, that the Sooners had squatters rights in Oklahoma and the Texas Panhandle. Heard had to promise—and put down in writing—that he would not conduct talent raids in that area if the Sooners agreed to meet LSU—so says True.

Gardner mentions in his article that Coach Bud Wilkinson and his keen-eyed scouting crew have a Beech Bonanza at their disposal "which flies a steady shuttle service between Norman and outlying points, picking up good-looking high school boys who will look even better in Oklahoma uniforms." Nice work if you can get it. The True story cites a couple of interesting incidents concerning Oklahoma and its method of recruiting football beef. Lindy Pearson, one of Oklahoma City's finest halfbacks, decided to enter the University of Arkansas back in 1947. The Touchdown Club—700 millionaires strong—was a little peeved about the whole thing, and decided that the hard-running youngster should remain in his native state to display his football talents. Arkansas had come across with a new car and a "loan" for Pearson and he seemed to be doing very well—until an overpowering case of homesickness overtook him.

He returned to Oklahoma and, of course, decided to enter O. U. to continue his search for higher education—or wages. The story goes that the TD Club paid back the "loan" and likewise reimbursed the Razorbacks for the auto. Pearson, in return, played three years of great football for the Sooners and everybody—with the possible exception of Arkansas athletic officials—was very happy about the whole thing.

Okies Miss a "Gem"

THE SOONERS DON'T GET all the high school hotshots from their "area," however. Gardner cites the case of Byron Townsend, a product of Odessa, Texas, as proof of this. The Okies, a legion representing Notre Dame, and a number of other interested schools chased down Texas way to chat with the Townsend youngster, who has been described as a small-sized mountain.

Blair Cherry and his Longhorn sidekicks finally managed to lure the lad into the University of Texas camp, however. Gardner says that it was later revealed by "a half-dozen sources close to the Oklahoma situation" that Townsend was offered: "A Cadillac convertible, $170 a month above room and board, and $5000, when he graduated." All of which is a tidy little item for a growing youngster to have in the bank—and in the garage.

It's all very interesting, but there's too much to go into here. Pick up a copy of True first chance and really get a load of how the Southwesterners buy a winner. Expensive but nice!

Southern Methodist First, Army Second in AP Grid Poll; Carolina Ranked 32nd

NEW YORK, Oct. 23 (AP)—Southern Methodist's unbeaten Mustangs galloped to the top of the standings today in the Associated Press weekly poll to determine the country's No. 1 college football team. The Southwest Conference power, which made stubborn Rice its 42-21 victim Saturday night, gained 96 first place nominations from the 246 voting sports critics. Army, leader the past two weeks, dropped to second despite its 49-0 conquest of Harvard while Oklahoma, the former runner-up, slipped to third, the place formerly held by Southern Methodist.

ballot listed Notre Dame, former darling of the voters. It was for eighth place and the resultant three points dropped the Irish, beaten last Saturday by Indiana for the second loss this season, into a tie for 39th place with Louisiana State, Yale and Virginia. Carolina garnered eight votes after enjoying an open date in its schedule and ended up in 32nd spot in the rankings. N. C. State, following its 16-13 upset victory over Maryland, a member of the top 10 last week, picked up only one vote to deadlock with four other teams for 40th place. Clemson was the highest ranked

Kentucky remained in fourth place and the top 10 was completed by California, Ohio State, Texas, Northwestern and Cornell in that order. The voting was the second heaviest in the 15 years of the poll being exceeded only by the 175 votes of last week. Only one

Carolina Frosh Booters Beaten By Wolf Cubs

Lose By 4-2 Despite Rally In 3rd Period

By Eddie Starnes A Carolina freshman soccer team improved over the one which lost to the Duke freshmen last week battled hard in the second half yesterday to overcome a 4-0 deficit handed them by the N. C. State freshmen—only to bow, 4-2—in an exciting game played on Fetzer Field.

Inside Left Drew Patterson took a pass from Bob Moore early in the third quarter to make the first score for the freshmen this year. Seven minutes later Bill Moss took the ball alone down the field from his outside left position to score on a high shot that went over the goalie's outstretched hands.

State jumped to a quick lead with three goals in the first quarter, and picked up one more in the second period to about sew up the ball game.

However, the Tar Babies looked much better in the second half and were definitely in the game in the final period when both teams were shooting madly in order to win the contest.

Ed Gross, Carolina goalie, stood out for the Tar Babies with many great saves in the waning minutes of the game, enabling them to stay in the game.

The next game for the Carolina freshmen will be a return match with the Duke frosh booters on Monday, Oct. 30.

W&M Tickets

The Athletic Ticket Office announced yesterday that over 12,000 seats are still available for the William and Mary game. Tickets are obtainable for both end zones, corner sections, and some very good seats in the upper level main stands.

The office has also secured 525 additional tickets for the Tennessee game and these are on sale at the office in Woolen Gym.

Justice Makes Pro Debut With Redskins; Is Used As Decoy And Punt Returner

By Frank Allston, Jr. A curious crowd of approximately 30,000 football fans descended on Washington's Griffith Stadium Sunday afternoon to see the Washington Redskins, the Chicago Cardinals and a guy named Justice play football. For their efforts, they saw the Cards outscore the 'Skins, 38-28.

Justice run one play for six yards, catch two passes, return four kicks and make himself useful as a flanker decoy. Much to the disappointment of the estimated Carolina contingent if some 2,500, Justice spent most of the game sitting on the Redskin bench and running in to receive kickoffs after Cardinal scores.

But when the Choo Choo was in the game, blue hats bobbed up and Confederate flags waved madly in the breeze. The little Carolina All-American performed like a veteran although he had seen only five days of practice with the Redskins before taking the field at game time Sunday.

Charlie provided the crowd with one of the best plays of the day when he went downfield under a Harry Gilmer pass and leaped high into the air to snare the ball from the grasp of two Cardinal defenders. Shortly before Duke garnered six points, Virginia picked up three, and Washington and Lee received one.

Glamack Says That Attitude Is Important In Pro Basketball

By Paul Barwick Not too many years back professional basketball did not exist in the United States or the world for that matter. Today, however, big time basketball is one of the major sports in the line of drawing cards and big business.

George Glamack, one of the greatest basketball players of all time and president of the Grand Rapids, Mich., Hornets, should know a little about the professional setup of today.

Glamack, who is back at Carolina now with his pro cagers, sounded off yesterday about the game. The following is an informal account of what the "Blind Bomber" had to say.

When a fellow gets out of college and decides to make basketball his life work, he has a great deal of things to take into consideration. Basketball of today has become a big man's game, which is not good. There are several good small basketball players, but they have two strikes against them when they try to go pro. However, Glamack stated, if a man has the determination to play on the hardwood, he can do it. Ralph (Buckshot) O'Brien, 5'9" guard for the Hornets, is an example of how a short player came through.

Then, too, a player must remember that he is working for a living in professional basketball. It is no longer a game in which mistakes can be overlooked. For example, the Hornets will pay 12 players a total salary of approximately $70,000 this year. This does not include the salary of the front office staff, the traveling expenses, advertising, etc.

A lot of planning and details go into the making of a pro basketball team. Glamack said, "I have been working on the organization of the Hornets four years. With my basketball experience and knowledge of the game, I decided that Grand Rapids was a very good town for professional basketball. It was an idea, but it had to be approached from a business standpoint."

GEORGE GLAMACK

... talks basketball ...

In regard to the personnel of a basketball team, Glamack says that every player must have a good personality and attitude. Attitude of the individual has a great deal to do with the showing of the team. "Big George" said, "If I had the best basketball player in the United States and he didn't have good character, personality, and attitude, he wouldn't be with us." Each fellow must consider himself as part of the whole and as a vital part of a big machine.

Tar Heels Take Honors In Lacrosse

One of Carolina's newest varsity sports, lacrosse, gained greatly in prestige last week with the announcement that two Tar Heels had been named to the list of All-Americans.

Grant Lynch and Nick Sowell received honorable mention for their lacrosse efforts in 1950. Lynch, 1950 captain, played defense for the local stickmen while Sowell will captain the '51 contingent from the goal position.

Both players were also named to the "Dixie League" lacrosse team which is composed of players from seven schools in Virginia and North Carolina. Other players in this circuit to receive All-America honors were Hooper and Proutt of Virginia, Clements and Tongue of Washington and Lee, and Gilfallon and Boyce of Duke.

Intramural Scoreboard

Weighing-in for the Intramural wrestling tournament is set Monday, Oct. 30 from 4:00 to 6:30 and Tuesday, Oct. 31, from 4:00 to 9:00 in the main basket room of Woolen Gym. The tournament will get underway Nov. 1.

Varsity wrestling coaches Sam Barnes and Kenny Gupton and freshman coach Hugh have volunteered to assist organizations in preparing their entries for the tournament, the mural office announced.

The wrestling room may be reserved, where coaching will be available by contacting the mural office. The room will be opened on Tuesdays from 4-6 and 7-8:30 and on Wednesdays, Thursdays and Mondays from 4-6 p. m.

Zeta Psi won the Fraternity team championships last year and "B" Dorm won the Dorm crown. The mural office has announced that interest is already running high and entries are likely to exceed last year's figure of 282.

Gregory Reports To Marines As Gridders Resume Drills

Carolina's gridders resumed drills today after receiving the weekend off and were in top spirit for Saturday's acid test with the off-and-on William and Mary Indians.

There were no new injuries and Trainer Fitz Lutz pronounced everyone fit to go Saturday. The only loss Saturday will be Guard Miles Gregory who has been called back to active duty with the Marines. He was a reserve.

W&M will bring a record of two wins and three defeats to Chapel Hill for the game and will be fresh from a 54-0 rout of Virginia Tech last Saturday. In addition, the Tribe holds a 20-14 decision at the expense of the University of Cincinnati and losses to Michigan State, 34-13, Wake Forest, 47-0, and VMI, 25-19.

Carolina worked hard yesterday in an attempt to add more strength to an offense which has accounted for a mere 27 points in four games. Plays were worked from the single wing, short punt and A formation with several (See GREGORY, page 4)
