and if they (the Scott administration) can sell him as a liberal against Umstead, they "will be doing something," the outspoken Scott critic asserted.

Actually, Thompson expects to see the '52 campaign reach its climax with a "trade" between Scott and Umstead, because Mr. Scott "has always wanted" to go to the Senate and Umstead has always "wanted to be Governor."

Even with Umstead's support, however, Scott would not be able to defeat Willis Smith if he should run against him for the Senate in 1954, Thompson believes.

"Kerr Scott is not so terribly bad. I guess we've had worse governors, but of course I wasn't living then," he declared.

Continuing his attack against Governor Scott, Thompson said that the recent parole board scandals are insignificant compared to "what we will have in about two weeks." While declining to elaborate further for fear of "scooping" his own newspaper, he blamed Scott for the alleged parole irregularities.

Bemoaning the system of "political trading" which he believes has to a large degree replaced statesmanship in N. C. politics in the past few years, Thompson said that Scott once had the opportunity to become a powerful leader in state politics for years to come but now has traded himself "off the track."

The Democratic party is now "fresh out of leaders and we are rapidly getting fresh out of morality, faith and plain old honesty," he said.
