

Papers Should Be Critics, Raleigh Minister Asserts Here

The primary responsibility of the newspaper is to be the critic of contemporary life, Dr. E. McNeill Poteat, distinguished clergyman and pastor of the Pullen Memorial Baptist church of Raleigh, told several hundred members of the Fourth Estate assembled here last night.

"While the newspaper can no more afford to be a daily scold than scandal sheet, it must not abdicate its right to be the critic—in the proper sense of the word—of the contemporary scene," Dr. Poteat declared.

97 Commerce Majors Make Dean's List

He addressed the opening session at the Carolina Inn here tonight of the 27th Annual Newspaper Institute being sponsored here and at Duke University through Saturday morning by the North Carolina Press Association, headed this year by Thomas J. Lassiter, who presided.

Preceding Dr. Poteat's address President Gordon Gray extended the University's welcome and President Lassiter responded.

Registration for the three-day Institute was held at the Inn this afternoon. Earlier the Associated Press held its annual luncheon session at the Inn.

Dr. Poteat, emphasizing the corresponding responsibilities of the First and the Fourth Estate towards society, said men of both the pulpit and the press have "formidable assignments."

"To be a wise critic demands both patience and discernment; to be a true conscience demands both sensitivity and balance," he said. "None of these qualities is easy to come by, and their exercise is never simple and rarely appreciated. But if the press refused to be critic and the church declines to be conscience, the mind of culture will grow dull and the morality of our civilization flaccid."

Dr. Poteat declared it would be difficult "to lay too great emphasis on the relation of fear to criticism since the criticism that is mere censoriousness may be little less than fear itself. Paradoxically, only the criticism that is fear-proof will be proof against the irruption of subconscious fears that express themselves in self-praise or self-pity, masquerading as an objective judgment. Nothing stultifies criticism life fear . . ."

"It is a sorry sight when the Church fears to act as conscience and the press fears to act as critic," he asserted. "When the free institutions of a free society are thwarted by those who do not believe in freedom—whether their authoritarianism be a political or an ecclesiastical faith—conscience and criticism must not yield to fear of their truculence or their power."
