

Programs For Commissions In Marine Corps Outlined

Marine Corps commissions are available to male students through two separate programs, Major Frank C. Caldwell, Marine Corps officer-instructor in the UNC NROTC unit, stated yesterday.

Reserve commissions are open to graduates of the Platoon Leaders Class and of the Officer Candidate Course.

Major Caldwell, Marine Corps procurement officer for the University, revealed these openings exist in spite of the heavy student response to the programs.

The Platoon Leaders Class makes it possible for selected students from the freshmen, sophomore, or junior class to train during summer vacation and to earn commissions in the Marine Corps Reserve upon graduation.

College graduates and those seniors who expect to graduate no later than June, 1952, are eligible for the Officer Candidate Course. Those selected will attend an extensive 10-week course at Quantico, Va., be commissioned Second Lieutenants, and attend a five months basic officer course at Quantico.

Students selected for the PLC are enlisted in the inactive Marine Corps Reserve, thereby receiving a deferment from active service other than the two six-weeks summer training periods until graduation from the University.

First six-week term of the PLC summer training is held at the Marine Corps Recruit Depot at Parris Island, S. C., and the second takes place at Marine Corps Schools, Quantico, Va.

During their initial camp, students are Marine Corporals with pay of about $142.00. During the advanced summer period the candidates are given the rank of Sergeant and receive about $176.00.

In addition to pay, trainees are quartered, clothed, subsisted, and given medical attention and transportation at government expense from their home to camp and return.

Students chosen for PLC training are subject to active duty only during a national emergency or at their own request. After completion of the summer training periods, and upon graduation from college, the candidates are eligible for their reserve commissions.

Candidates for this program must not be already enrolled in any other military organization, including the Army, Air Force, and Naval ROTC, and must be male citizens of the United States. Applicants must not have a claim pending for, or be drawing a pension, disability allowance, disability compensation, or retired pay from the government. They must sign an agreement to serve for the required periods of active duty training.

Platoon Leaders Class enlistees must be over 17 years old and of an age that they will not have reached their 25th birthday by July of the calendar year in which they will become eligible for appointment to commissioned rank.

All applicants for the two programs have to pass a physical program in order to be accepted.

Interested students are asked to contact Major Caldwell or Master Sergeant Bert Wheeler at the Naval Armory as soon as possible. Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday afternoons from 2:00 to 5:00 are the scheduled interview hours for both programs.

"That's news to me," remarked Coach Carl Snavely when informed of the Horner article. "I'm not qualified to speak for the University, but I'm sure UNC isn't putting athletes through high school. However, 'alumni folks' might be helping Bullock through the military school, the coach said.

Snavely declared he had never met the 190-pound T formation quarterback until a few days ago when he had a short talk with him about football and Carolina. Bullock plans to go to school here, as far as the coach knows.

Bullock formerly played at Ayden but transferred to Fork Union where he starred in the fall. The team had a 6-4 record.

A new Southern Conference ruling requires member schools to assume full responsibility, and dispense directly, through the school itself, aid to all athletes, says the Raleigh News & Observer. A Monday editorial asked that the conference "keep its eyes" on Bullock's case and declared the conference ruling should include athletes not yet in college as well as those that are.

The News & Observer called for closer scrutiny on the case because other schools are involved besides Carolina, it said.

"Coach Bob" Fetzer, director of athletics, had no comment on the Horner article.

If the conference ruling included high school athletes, the ruling would not be retroactive in any case, athletic officials have said. The Educational Foundation high school students anyway, they declare.

Horner speculated that colleges would jeopardize their standings in the future if the conference cracked down on advance subsidization.
