tempted to vote during that period.

Dan Cox, who was tending the Graham Memorial main lounge office at the time, stated that a number of inquiries were made about the unsupervised poll from people who desired to vote. Cox was unable to say if anyone actually placed ballots in the box while it was untended. However, Daily Tar Heel photographer Ruffin Woody whose darkroom overlooks the poll, charged last night that "there were ballots put in that box." He said his information came from "reliable sources," whom he declined to name.

Elections Board Chairman Erline Griffin retorted: "If every ballot in that box were stuffed, it couldn't possibly affect the outcome of the legislative reduction amendment," since only 51 votes were cast in the box and 121 more would be needed to pass the amendment.

She pointed out that the judicial reform amendment, which passed, was a bi-partisan measure and had been approved unanimously by the Student Legislature. Therefore, any contest of this vote appeared to be unlikely. Miss Griffin, nevertheless, called a special meeting for 1:30 this afternoon in Graham Memorial to clarify the board's stand on the issue. She urged that all Elections Board members attend.
