Campus Elections Slated For Today

KEN PENEGAR, SP candidate for secretary-treasurer.

ED GROSS, UP candidate for secretary - treasurer.

Taking their cues from the campaigners in the national political parties, the campus politicians made their final whirlwind fling yesterday before resting cases for today's election.

Some 160 hopeful campaigners will appear on the ballots seeking various campus offices in this, the annual Spring elections. Winners today will rule the campus until next Spring's balloting.

Today's voting is the climax to two weeks of hectic stumping, hand-shaking, door-to-door canvassing, and name-calling, as the candidates, both party-affiliated and independent, have gone all out to win the vote.

Placards, banners, cards, blotters, calendars, and other well-known means of campaigning have been strewn throughout every dormitory and class room on campus, indicating, even without a glance at the budding trees, that Spring has come to UNC.

This election's major interest point has been the campaign of the two candidates for president of the student body. A hot contest has been raging between Hamilton C. Horton, Jr., Winston-Salem, and Kenneth Barton, Elizabeth, N. J., for the job.

The campaign issue between the pair has been one of political party affiliations, and with subsequent accusations by both candidates, the endorsing Student and University Parties (formal political groups on campus) have rallied behind their respective candidate.

Sharing the Interest spotlight with presidential election is the battle for editor of The Daily Tar Heel, student-run campus newspaper.

Three Greensboro students, two men and a coed, have been distributing their campaign circulars and talking persuasively to constituents in trying to win the vote.

The men, staff endorsed and SP David Buckner present Daily Tar Heel managing editor, and Barry Farber, Ind. DTH columnist, are due to get degrees from the journalism school in June but will return to school next year. The coed is Beverly Baylor, UP, a junior in the journalism school and associate editor of the paper.

Candidates are up for election to sophomore, junior and senior class offices, as well as seats in the student legislature and honor councils, publication board, and head cheerleader.
