

Scandinavia Topic Of Supper Forum

By Grady Elmore

Beating the United States and other large countries in the recent Winter Olympics was of little importance to Norwegians. What mattered was "we licked the Swedes," says Agnar Mykle.

Mykle was the only Scandinavian-born expert on the YMCA supper-forum panel discussing Scandinavia in Lenoir hall Monday night. Barry Farber, and Ann and Jim Roberts served as the other experts.

A native of Oslo, Norway, guitar-player and puppetmaster Mykle spoke concerning the differences between the countries of Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Finland, and Iceland.

Farber based his qualifications for the panel upon his two months service in the Norwegian merchant marine and six months attendance at the University of Oslo. He reviewed Norway's history in World War II, then discussed the people's sentiments towards the king.

The Roberts, who recently returned from Sweden where they were students and Ann doubled as a housewife, spoke of Sweden's neutrality and the living standards in that country.

Norway, for a long time united with Sweden and considered below Denmark's level of international repute, delights in showing up her neighbors now, Mykle said, although the Scandinavians are almost like brothers. There are some differences in the nationalities, he stated.

"The Swedes are somewhat stuffy and formal, while the Danes have a continental air of gaiety, and the Norwegians enjoy an adventurous life, very close to the sea," Mykle related.

Farber, going into the history of Norway, pointed out that the king is not a native Norwegian.

"When Norway went into business for itself about 1905, it imported a king from Denmark and held a national election for approval of the monarch," he said. "The king's Hooper rating was boosted during the war when he personally led troops against the Germans on horseback."

Ann Roberts dispelled the popular conception of tall, blond-haired characteristics of these people "There are no racial distinctions, no distinctive appearance," she said. "Usually, however, they have a blond complexion even though their hair is black or brown."

Jim Roberts gave two reasons for Sweden's neutral policy: by following such a policy they help to keep Finland out of Russia's grasp; and Sweden's neutrality has no actual bearing upon its defense since Norway and Denmark joined the Atlantic Pact, because Sweden must be protected in order to safeguard those two nations.

"Even though these countries have every reason to fear Russia," said Jim, "their fear is more controlled than it is in the United States."

Communists, Mykle added, are a very small group in Scandinavia: there are none in the Norwegian parliament today, for instance.

Socialism in Scandinavia was commented upon by Mykle and Jim Roberts. "Although the people are intense individualists, they recognized a necessity for socialism, or collectivism," Roberts stated.

"There is no fear of government controls," Mykle opined. "Scandinavians would not stand for too much domination." The government simply finances a project, and does not exercise strong control over such undertakings, he said.

After the opening song session of Scandinavian tunes, led by Mykle and Jim Roberts, the panel discussion, and a question period, Mykle exhibited several puppets clothed in native costumes of the countries.

Chairman Dick Hartung of the YMCA World Relatedness Commission, sponsors of the regular Monday night supper-forum, closed the program with an announcement of a meeting of the commission at 5 p.m. tomorrow in the YMCA. Topic for the next forum will be South America, Hartung said.
